SHERBOURNE ST. PULPIT FILLED BY NEW PASTOR

Rev. George Jackson of Edinburgh, Makes a Deep Impression on His Congregation.

A new and very considerable force has been added to the religious agencies of Toronto in the advent of Rev. George Jackson. Sherbourne-street Methodist Church was yesterday the scene of his first labors as the pastor of that congregation, and the crowds that attended both services are likely to be increased rather than diminished as the fame of the preacher and his message is spread.

Simplicity is the note of the new generation of preachers, and in this respect Mr. Jackson's preaching is strongly to all who abhor pretence and affectation.

"There is no humbug about him," was the hearty endorsement of many last night. In speech, in gesture, in method of thought and in urging his message there is the same intense directness, stripped of florid ornament, but lovely in the living grace of power and activity. There is nothing of the coldness of marble, all of the beauty of sculpture transfigured into life in his splendid naturalness.

Mr. Jackson has not many advantages of presence, or at least not many prepossessing advantages. Among the architects and engineers of this country you will find many of just his physical type. He is of good height, and a kindly, not uncouthly countenance, with the student's glasses hooked behind his ears. A voice neither strong nor harsh obediently pliant to the speaker's will conveys his thought with more earnestness than one realizes until the cumulative effect of entreaty and argument, pleading and warning, reaches its climax.

Now Won't you Get That Roof Fixed

after the soaking you got from yesterday's heavy rainstorm?

Better order to-morrow enough of Russell's Ready Roofing to cover your building, and you will have a waterproof, weatherproof and fireproof roof. Any one can put it on, and the cost per hundred square feet for all material supplied is, ordinary grade 1.75, best grade $2.00—sold only by with due stages of insistence and emphasis in well high irresistible strength.

Of gesture there was much, but nothing obtrusive. It is only the speaker's thought that obtrudes. Presence, speech, gesture, all else is subordinate. It is not easy to forget what this man has to say to you.

Mr. Jackson felt the heat last night like everybody else, and was warned to try and take things easy in the hot weather. But it would be as easy to restrain the storm of which he spoke as to hold back the influence which would himself in the nature of such a preacher. The insistent message seeks utterance, and no half-birth is possible for the mature completeness of the truth he has to speak.

After the Young Man.

Mr. Jackson has no desire to commit himself just yet to any statement of the plans he desires to carry out in the three years he has determined to spend here.

"But when you talk of aims," he said, "young men are what I am after. I am after them." He spoke of this aim as the work in which he had been most successful, and as that in which he hoped to be recognized in Toronto by those whom he sought. One could divine the soul of another Dr. D. D. Phelps in the yearning of the preacher, akin to the wishful ardor of the Master, for the young man, John.

"Reading, as I shall always do in the case of the New Testament, from the Revised Version," explained Mr. Jackson, as he gave out the Scripture lesson last night. He would use the Revised Version of the Old Testament also in the morning, but for the responsive readings, in which the congregation join, so many of which still retain the King James Version. The passage was the Gospel of John, 1st chapter, 4th verse, to the end. It was the story of Jesus and Nathaniel.

"No one, I think, who has read his New Testament with care can have failed to be struck by the entire absence from it of anything like what we call hero-worship. Biography there is next to none. The characters appear and disappear, are taken up and dropped again, in the most bewildering way, until we find the determining principle of it all."

This was the opening sentence of the sermon, definitely arresting attention. The evangelist had omitted far more than they recorded, and there was only one object in their selection of incidents. Everything they told bore directly on the character of Jesus.

"These things are written that ye may believe that Christ is the Son of God, and that believing ye may have life in His name."

Nathaniel was identical with the Bartholomew mentioned in the three lists of the Apostles given by the evangelists, and this was the narrative of how he came to be called. It seemed too easy to come to him, and in a moment he was called. His difficulties were all brushed aside, and in a moment the story was taken which determined the destiny of a lifetime. It was well to remember, however, that all that passed between the Master and the disciples was not recorded. What Jesus said was not the only agency at work. Something went out from His eyes, forth from His heart.

Truth From Fiction.

"You read about some man in a work of fiction that he had looked in some woman's face, and how, in a moment something happened which changed his whole life. Would you put the book down, crying, 'Stuff and nonsense?'" asked the preacher.

Could you not believe that the presence of the Son of God was able to accomplish a similar change?

The intense realization of the presence and power of Jesus as a direct and actual influence is basic in Mr. Jackson's thought. Presently he turned to Philip, "Look at this man that brought Nathaniel to Jesus."

"Jesus findeth Philip."

"What is the next thing you read about Philip?"

"Philip findeth Nathaniel."

It was God's method to work through intermediaries. How should men hear without a preacher?

"In the long run everything hangs on the human agent."

"God saves men by saved men," was a corollary. There was no way to Christ for Nathaniel, but through Philip.

He would draw a bow at a venture, remarked the preacher, for he did not know the congregation yet. There were some there who had been in the church for five, ten, twenty years.

"Who is your Nathaniel?" he would ask of such. Were there any who looked to them, as all his life long, Nathaniel must have looked to Philip?

"Many of our notions of testimony are in need of sifting," was the next thought. Mere indiscriminate discharge of thought and feeling concerning Christianity often did not only no good, but harm. But where men stood to each other in the relation of Philip to Nathaniel, an ounce of testimony was worth a ton of argument. No word went so unerringly to its mark as a frank, honest face to face word of personal experience. Philip was a man to whom unquestioning obedience came naturally. Before Nathaniel could call to have his questions answered and his doubts resolved.

"Let no young man be troubled because faith is not for him the comparatively easy thing it is for others."

An Honest Doubter.

Were it not so hackneyed a phrase he would call Nathaniel and honest doubter. Many men to-day used doubt as a screen behind which to hang an unclean life.

"For all such there is no other answer: no, not from the lips of God Himself," was his comment on the narrative of a sceptical officer in India.

whose life was not immaculate. He found fault with the Bible for its contradictions and difficulties, and the regal chaplain blurted out:

"Well, the seventh commandment is plain enough."

Philip was a simple-minded man, but he never showed more wisdom than in the way he brought Nathaniel to Jesus. There was no use arguing with a prejudiced man.

"You might as well argue with the storm that swept over our city a couple of hours ago."

"Come and see," said Philip, and Nathaniel was strong enough to put his prejudices to the test of facts. He was not afraid to make a personal reckoning of the claims of Jesus.

"Will you do that? Will you come and see Jesus? These murdering church folk—will we let them stand aside and stand in the presence of the Master yourself?"

There were no words to convey at second or third or fifth hand what the life of the Master meant to men. He had attempted to describe Switzerland in a lecture.

"What can any words or any pictures do to convey the dread majesty of the mighty mountains or the desolate wastes of everlasting snow?" he explained. How much less easy to tell of Jesus.

"You who are bogged in the morass of patriarchal morality, the Book of Joshua and the numbers of the books of Moses. Come and see Jesus!" he appealed. If there was one book in the world which could best be read backwards it was the Bible. They should study the New Testament first.

"With at light in your hand, go back to Genesis and Isaiah. The rough places will be made plain, and the way will be clear for all of you."

He closed with a touching insistence on the value of the personal knowledge of Christ. It was many years he told them, since their preacher had been found by Jesus. If there was any merit in the work he had done it flowed from that.

"Will you also be His disciples?"

The service was ended with the singing of the hymn:

There is a kindness in God's mercy
Like the kindness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice
Which is more than liberty.

For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

If our love were but more simple
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the favor of our Lord.

leaving religious teaching to the churches. This is Mr. Chamberlain's view. It may be that, should a compromise not be effected, the crucial point is whether religious instruction in the state schools should be left in the hands of the regular teaching staff, and what the nature of that instruction should be. As it stands, the plan which has been proposed, even if it is not wholly satisfactory to the extreme Nonconformists, whose disaffection accounts for the drop in the government minorities in certain of the committee divisions.

Prosperity in Britain.

Speaking in regard to the economic and industrial situation in Britain, Mr. Grenwood said that the country was entering upon a period of prosperity unparalleled even in Canada. Nothing stood in the way of relieving even the agricultural depression but the semi-fundamental system which prevailed. Were British holdings available on anything like the terms offered in Canada, land would provide an even better field for the agriculturist. Why the legal expenses of transfers alone were greater than the prime cost of land in Canada.

"Is there to be a home rule bill next year, Mr. Grenwood?"

"Well, you may say that a majority of the Liberal representatives in the house of commons are pledged against the introduction of any measure repeating Gladstone's proposals, during the existence of the present parliament. But next session, Mr. Bryce, the Irish leader, will undoubtedly introduce a bill calculated to improve the system of Irish administration and the position of the country generally."

"Is there likely to be an entente cordiale with Germany?"

"I think the relations with Germany are improving, and that this will probably continue. Indeed an entente cordiale all round is in the air of British just now. I do not consider there is any real ill-feeling between the peoples of Britain and Germany. There is unquestionably considerable distrust regarding the aims and designs of the Kaiser, largely owing to his capacity for saying the wrong thing, but the Germans are restless over their political isolation in Europe and he appeared inclined to cultivate better relations with Britain."

"What about fiscal reform—should Mr. Chamberlain be removed from active participation in the movement?"

"Fiscal reform," said Mr. Grenwood, "is in my opinion burst, but in any event Mr. Chamberlain's disappearance from politics would mean the extinction of a political factor. Movements of this kind are, in my opinion, dependent on personality. Until Mr. Chamberlain took it upon himself to disregard, and its advocates, such as Sir Howard Vincent and Mr. Chaplin, were of little account. He had no weight in the formation of public opinion. Undoubtedly there are numerous supporters of fiscal reform among the Conservatives, but they have always been, but except Mr. Chamberlain they have no leader of ability."

Asked about the position of Lord Rosebery, Mr. Grenwood said that he had practically placed himself outside the party sphere. This was due to his speech against home rule—not so much to the general effect of it as to the persistent spirit displayed toward Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman. But for that speech he would certainly have been included in the Liberal cabinet. Since its delivery he had said nothing.

Repeal of Embargo.

"Will the cattle embargo be removed?"

"I think so," replied Mr. Grenwood. "The cabinet and the great majority of the ministerial party are against the embargo, and I feel sure that being talked out a division would certainly have been taken and resulted favorably. It is my intention to reintroduce the bill next session."

"I understand," Mr. Grenwood remarked in conclusion, "that Mr. Buxton, the postmaster-general, has submitted to Mr. Lemieux, the Canadian postmaster-general, a comprehensive scheme for a reduction in the postal rates on books and magazines, and that it is likely to be accepted as a basis for a satisfactory arrangement."
