WAITS 15 YEARS; THEN JILTS HIM

A Convict Released Finds His Fiancee Just About to Marry.

New York, May 23.—When James Carter was sent to Clinton Prison fifteen years ago he was a strapping, prepossessing young fellow of 25. But he was a burglar. He had been "caught with the goods" and so he had to go behind the bars.

It was a long sentence, but the unfortunate fellow was buoyed up by the promise of a pretty girl who lived in South Brooklyn and who had told him when he was convicted that she would be true to him and would marry him when he came back, provided he would lead a different life. He said he would, and served his sentence uncomplainingly. He came out of prison 40 years old, gray and friendless, but still buoyed up with the hope of matrimonial happiness. He began to search for his fiancée and finally found her. She was a sober-faced woman and she told him she had fallen in love with another man and was about to be married to him.

"You promised to wait for me," the poor fellow said.

"I know, and I did wait for years, but it got too lonesome," she answered. "I am sorry, but it is too late now. My wedding dress is all made."

"Well," replied the ex-convict at last, "I suppose I will have to give it up, but let me look at your wedding dress."

His former fiancée acquiesced and took him into the house. Once inside the broken-hearted, prematurely old man flew into a rage, tore the wedding dress to shreds, broke the furniture, and proceeded to make the house a wreck. Then he took his departure, saying he would return and finish the job.

The frightened woman sought the police, and as a result Carter was picked up and was in line in the Brooklyn detective department today for inspection by the squad. Captain McCuskey told the squad to arrest him whenever they set eyes on him, as he was a desperate crook who would shoot.

When Carter was subsequently arraigned in the police court on a charge of vagrancy he drew out a $2 bill as proof that he had visible means of support. The name of the woman to whom he was engaged was not divulged by the police.

The "Society of Assurance for Widows and Orphans" was the first known insurance company, and was established in London in 1699.

ENGLISH AUTHORS FACE STARVATION

Trust Methods of London Publishers Are Doing the Business.

London, May 19.—The English publishers of the six-shilling novel—which is the equivalent of the $1.50 novel—have only just begun to discover that Harmsworth, Novels and Pearson, each of whom publishes big London dailies and countless weeklies and monthlies, have practically cornered the market for the sixpenny rights of famous English novels, and are going to put them into such vast quantities that few henceforth will buy the six-shilling book, except for the libraries.

Practically every novelist in England who has attained a sale of, say, 10,000 copies of any one book in the last ten years, has been captured by one or other of these publishers, or by the two or three other firms that are publishing cloth-bound books at sevenpence, and are now paid over in the form of advance royalties on these books in the last month or two have been prodigious.

As all these sixpenny novels are by famous authors, and as the publishers of the same are so much disturbed by the condition of affairs over here that they will scarcely look at any novel, except by an author of established reputation, for publication in six-shilling form, there is evidently a bad season ahead for the moderately successful author, and for the beginner. Experts are of the opinion that, whatever his ability may be, now expects to pay liberally for at least a year or two for the privilege of being heard in London.

For the publishers estimate that at least 40,000 copies of a sixpenny book have to be sold before there is enough profit in it to make it worth while—and not more than one beginner in ten thousand can count on any such sale in England. The case for the moderately good author promises to be still worse, for with an unknown author there is always the gambling chance of making a big hit, whereas with the author who has been writing for years, books that sell only a few thousand copies, there is no hope of a big hit.

Already the fairly good English author has lost his American market, for the same reason. Publishers who come over here in droves every spring to pick up good things will no longer look at anything that is not expected to make a big hit. They are spending more money than ever on the big English author, but are economizing on the little author.

A SKIPPER IN TROUBLE

New Westminster, B. C., May 21.—With twenty Chinamen on board his ship, all eager to forsake a life on the rolling waves for the more attractive pursuit of agricultural life, and with bonds amounting to $10,000 up as a guarantee that the Chinamen will not leave his vessel while in a British port, the captain of the Woodford is certainly having the time of his life.

The news leaked out yesterday that one of the crew had already escaped and a reward of $250 had been offered for his capture. If the Chinaman is not back on board the boat when it is ready to sail, the captain will have to forfeit $500 to the Government. This prospect is not in the least attractive to him, and in an effort to restrain the other slant-eyed sailors from following their compatriot's example, guards have been placed on board the vessel, and the Chinamen will be herded night and day until the good ship is once more on the salt sea waves. The captain of the ship is offering $5 a day to men who will undertake to prevent the Chinamen from escaping.

Meanwhile, the missing Chinaman is being sought for in all parts of the city and surrounding country, and several parties have been organized to try and corral the elusive son of the Flowery Kingdom, and incidentally secure the $250 offered by the captain. Every Chinaman answering to the published description of the deserter will be looked on with suspicion for the next few days, and the chances of the eventual escape of Hop Off are remote.

THE LADDER OF THE MORALIST WILL NOT REACH UP TO HEAVEN

It Is Only Good as Far as It Goes—Dr. Wharton in Jubilee Rink.

Although the sky last night looked threatening, indicating the near approach of rain, a large audience gathered in Jubilee Rink—considerably larger than that of Monday or Tuesday evenings. Those in attendance, too, appeared to be more responsive and more in touch with Evangelist Wharton in his kindly, gentle, but earnest appeals to their hearts and consciences. The speaker was listened to with the closest attention, as he pressed home the Gospel message of love and salvation, and when, toward the close of the services, he asked those who were willing to accept Christ to acknowledge it by rising to their feet, a large number responded.

An appeal to those who were church members, but were not fully satisfied that they were Christians, brought several persons around Dr. Wharton, who gave them his hand and a whispered word of encouragement.

An invitation to Christians and others who desired prayers for relatives, friends, associates or themselves, brought a large number from their seats to the floor where the evangelist stood, and here the divine blessing was invoked in their behalf.

As usual, a preliminary offering of song by choir and audience, both separate and combined, was carried out with spirit under the leadership of Dr. George Lau, and with the able assistance of the cornet player and the pianist.

Seeing the Father.
Rev. A. J. Bowen, of Egerton Street Baptist Church, was invited upon to open the 8 o'clock meeting with prayer, which was followed by the singing of "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Dr. Wharton made a few introductory remarks, and related a touching incident that occurred while President Abraham Lincoln and his family occupied the "White House" at Washington. It seems that little "Tad" Lincoln, the president's favorite son, one day met a Union soldier leaving the White House, and in tears. Tad wanted to know why the soldier wept, and the man told the little fellow that he wanted to ask the president for leave to go home to his dying wife, but he was not allowed admission to the president's presence. "Don't go away," said Tad, "I'll take you in to see my father!" The White House officials demurred, intimating that the president was in consultation with the war department. But that made no difference to Tad; he took the soldier in to see President Lincoln, who at once signed the papers that gave the soldier permission to pass through the lines of the army to his home. "That is what Jesus Christ does for us," said Dr. Wharton. "He takes us into the Father's presence."

The Sinner's Substitute.
Rev. D. S. Hamilton, of the First Congregational Church, offered up a prayer; the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was impressively sung, and then Dr. Wharton read a portion of Isaiah, III, in which the prophet foretells and describes the person and mission of Christ as the sin-bearer for the world. In illustrating the doctrine of substitution, the evangelist told an affecting story in connection with the civil war, mentioning a soldier who had been notified to report for duty, and, with a heart almost broken at the thought of leaving his sick wife and young children, he was about to start for the front, when a stalwart young neighbor came to him and insisted on taking the volunteer's place as a substitute, without any reward. The brave fellow died on the battlefield, and on his tombstone (erected by the man whose place he took) is seen today engraved this line, "He died for me." So Christ, in the words of Isaiah, "hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." We can all say, "He died for me."

Three Kinds of Preaching.
Here Dr. Lau sang with fervor an appropriate solo, and then Dr. Wharton gave a short address from I. Corinthians, I, 23-24: "For we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, the power of God and the wisdom of God." The speaker described the three kinds of preaching which prevail. First, that of the preacher and pastor who has a settled field of labor. Then there is evangelistic preaching. "Such is my sweet work," said Dr. Wharton, "going from place to place telling the old, old story. But there is the third kind, or conversational preaching, such as is done in the Sunday school, the workshop, or the home."

In speaking of the latter class of evangelists, Dr. Wharton mentioned a case showing the marvelous results effected, notably that of a Dane in Johnstown, Pa., through whose efforts seven out of ten of a party with whom he worked were brought to Christ.

"I believe in the unlimited power of prayer," the speaker said. "I judge a sermon by the good it does; just as I judge a dinner—not by the kind of dishes on which it is served." Dr. Wharton said he had heard nearly all the noted evangelists and preachers of the day, "but the preaching that lives and lasts, and has done me more good than any other," he said, "was the preaching of my mother. Mothers don't lose your opportunity. Take advantage of it now. The progress of the individual, he claimed, was the most effective of all."

The Ladder to Heaven.
Dr. Wharton went on to point out three different ways in which the Gospel message is received. The self-righteous class consider themselves as good as any Christian and depend upon their own merits. The most similar to the Epicureans and Stoics of old Greece live only for today, and to them the story of the cross is foolishness. Robert Ingersoll was the modern representative of this class, who go so far as to justify the crime of suicide. Ingersoll gave a lecture that he entitled, "The Mistakes of Moses," and said the preacher, "I agree with the New York philosopher, Josh Billings, who said he wouldn't give five cents to hear Bob Ingersoll on 'The Mistakes of Moses,' but he would pay fifty dollars to hear Moses on 'The Mistakes of Bob Ingersoll.'" Then there is the third class, the humble believers, to whom the Gospel is "the power of God, and the wisdom of God." The preacher asked his hearers to examine themselves under the searchlight of truth, and see to which class they belonged.

In speaking of the moralist, Dr. Wharton said that the moralist is "in good as far as it goes," he said, "but it is not good enough to save you. There is only one ladder that will reach to heaven, and that is the blood-stained cross of Calvary."

The gathering of the numerous converts around the evangelist when he came down from the platform, and also of those who wished prayer to be made for themselves and friends, was a stirring sight, the entire assemblage singing and praising the Lord.

Rev. J. J. Teasdale made the closing prayer. Before dismissal, attention was called to the union preliminary meeting held each night in the Christian church, an hour before the meeting in the hall, and all who were meeting in the Auditorium Sunday afternoon.

GRADUATION DAY FOR VICTORIA HOSPITAL TRAINING SCHOOL

Seventeen Young Lady Nurses Received Their Well-Earned Honors.

Yesterday afternoon at the Y. M. C. Auditorium seventeen graduates of the Victoria Hospital Training School for Nurses were awarded their diplomas and badges, while Miss Florence Darville, of London, was presented with the gold medal, awarded to the nurse who showed herself to be most proficient in her work during her course of training. Miss Mary Thompson, of Paisley, was given the second prize for general proficiency, which was a silver medal. The following were the other graduating nurses: Josephine E. Archer, London; May B. Armstrong, London; Ada M. Evans, London; Edna Given, Millbrook; Gertrude W. Hagar, Beamsville; Kate Hornegold, London; Jennie Johnston, Thamesford; Margaret C. Kennedy, Ingersoll; Sallie McKinnon, Walkerton; Jeannette McVicar, Wardville; Lella M. Reynolds, Sparta; Margaret Sinclair, Mitchell; Annie Talbot, Aylmer; Florence Waugh, London; Isabella Wilson, London.

A short programme of music and speeches was rendered during the afternoon, and in every way the event was of a very pleasing nature.

Rev. Dyson Hague opened the ceremonies of the afternoon with a short prayer, which was followed by a vocal solo by Mrs. R. Munro, which, judging by the hearty applause which followed it, was greatly appreciated.

Mayor Judd, who presided, then called upon Rev. Dyson Hague to address the graduating nurses, which he did in a very thoughtful speech. After the presentation of the gold medal, the names of the trained nurse, Rev. Mr. Hague said the year 1893 was a memorable one for nurses, and then went on to tell the familiar story of the life of Florence Nightingale, the founder of the "White Cross Society," and the woman who is held up as an example of what a truly good woman can do for suffering humanity when she enters the nursing profession. Before her time the very thought of a woman going to a hospital or public institution of any kind to train for the nursing profession would have been looked on as out of all reason, and the woman who would have gone would have been scorned as being vulgar and even indecent. But the example of that great woman, who was known as the "Angel of Light," and whose very shadow the soldiers used to kiss, and the thought of whom used to make strong men weep, wrought a great change. No sooner had her fame spread abroad than the number of women all over the world entered hospitals to gain the experience necessary to equip them for a life similar to that of Florence Nightingale. He told of her going out to the British battlefields, and working night and day, and all the horrors of war, in order to relieve the sufferings of the soldiers.

Florence Nightingale's Return to England.
When Florence Nightingale returned from the scene of the war, England almost went wild in an endeavor to give her a welcome, and do her honor, but she was too much for the world of the proposed honor to be done her. A purse of $250,000 was raised for her, but instead of appropriating this money to her own pleasures, she devoted it toward a fund for the erection of the Nightingale Training School for Nurses, in connection with one of the great hospitals of London, and in which hundreds of nurses have since received their training.

The speaker then compared the work of a nurse to that of an artist, and showed that in many ways the nurse's work is one of the finest, if not in every way the finest of arts.

Advice to the Graduates.
Mr. Hague then gave the graduating nurses some timely advice, advising them to be careful to maintain their health so that they would be able to stand the strain of their incessant labors. The advantages and absolute necessity of keeping a steady nerve, even temper, and pleasant disposition were referred to. "It takes an heroic woman to keep cheerful amid annoyances and trying situations," said Mr. Hague. "One essential quality of a nurse was the capacity for instant and exact obedience to the doctor's orders." "Speaking as one who has had wide experience in visiting hospitals, and who has had the experience of lying for a long period in a hospital, and being attended by different nurses," said Mr. Hague, "I wish to say that I am thoroughly convinced that a nurse is born, not made." He then went on to show that to be a nurse in the true sense of the word a woman must be the power of swift, feminine intuition, and an infinite capacity for self-sacrifice. For this reason the mothers are the best nurses that the world has ever seen or ever will see, because they are imbued with true love and patience, and are willing to sacrifice their own pleasure to any extent. The perfect nurse must have, combined with a thorough training, that wonderful mystic inexpressible something which is found in a truly noble woman. "Love and serve, and about all things, think constantly of Him who went about healing the sick, relieving the suffering, and uplifting the downfallen, and his blessing will always be upon your work," were the closing remarks of the address.

The Florence Nightingale Pledge.
The Florence Nightingale pledge, which has to be taken by each nurse before she can receive her certificate, was then administered, as follows:

"I solemnly pledge myself before God and in the presence of this assembly, to pass my life in purity and to practice my profession faithfully. I will abstain from whatever is deleterious and mischievous, and will not take or knowingly administer any harmful drug."

"I will do all in my power to maintain and elevate the standard of my profession, and will hold in confidence all personal matters committed to my keeping, and all family affairs coming to my knowledge in the practice of my calling."

"With loyalty will I endeavor to aid the physician in his work, and devote myself to the welfare of those committed to my care."

The next number on the programme was a solo by Cyril Dwight-Edwards, who greatly delighted the audience with his magnificent voice.

Presentation of Honors.
Mayor Judd, who occupied the chair, then announced that the presentation of diplomas and badges would take place, and called upon the Chairman, Secretary of the hospital trust to make the presentations. The graduates, who occupied chairs on the platform, passed one after the other along in front of the audience, and were each in turn given their certificates, etc. The nurses also presented each of the graduates with a beautiful shower bouquet of roses. While friends contributed floral sprays to several of the graduates.

Miss Edna Given, of Millbrook, was presented with a valuable special prize, of a case of instruments, awarded to the nurse who was most proficient at work connected with the surgical department. Dr. Niven made the presentation.

According to a long-standing custom a doctor had to address the nurses after their diplomas had been presented, and Dr. H. A. McCallum did so in a most satisfactory manner. He began by saying that in many cases a nurse is blamed for creating trouble in homes where she goes in her official capacity, when the trouble really lies with the people themselves, for they do not treat her properly. On this point the doctor gave the audience a few hints on how to treat a nurse. "No hospital is fulfilling its duty to the community unless it teaches as well as heals," said the doctor, "and we should all remember that there would never have been a hygienic institute here unless the Medical School had come first." Speaking of the glorious future in store for the nursing profession, he said that nurses are being trained in a far better way now in our hospitals than they were several years ago, but that they would make still greater progress in methods in the years to come. He was sorry to say on the other hand that the opportunities for teaching bedside medicine and bedside surgery to medical students were not

The One Gas Range for You

There is just one practical gas range that does all the best a range can do, and does it quicker, cheaper and easier than any coal range ever can. The gas range makes summer cooking clean and pleasant instead of mussy and toilsome. Its name is the Oxford Gas Range.

The Oxford requires less gas to run it than any other range, and its asbestos lining holds the heat in the oven. Other gas ranges radiate it out into the kitchen.

Cleaning the Oxford detachable burners is as easy as lifting and wiping it.

The oven doors drop flat instead of swinging sideways, so that a heavy roast can be drawn out for inspection. Rest the roast on the oven door to bake—the hinges cannot break down.

The Oxford Gas Range burns with a clear blue flame, all day long, and no waste. There is no odor of burnt grease.

There are many other reasons why the Oxford is superior to any other Gas Range. Call in and see this range and let us demonstrate its efficiency to you. The price of this high-grade Gas Range with 16-inch oven is $18 and $20, according to finish. We also make this range to burn natural gas.
