CANADA TO FACE A HARD COAL SHORTAGE

Indications That Small Shipments Are Coming to This Country.

(Cor. Financial Post.)

New York, Your correspondent is told in coal circles here that practically no coal is being shipped to Canada and that even if the anthracite mines should begin producing again at once the Dominion is likely to suffer from a hard coal famine this winter, which will be far worse than anything of the kind that it has yet suffered. In other words, an anthracite shortage is already assured. According to authorities in no way can the industry make up the shortage which has been created by the thirteen weeks of idleness since the beginning of the coal year on April 1. These mines, it is being pointed out, have on rare occasions touched a total production of two million tons a week. The minimum demand is placed at eighty-six million tons a year. Deducting five million tons as stock on hand on April first, production would have to run eighty-one million tons during the next year. There are thirty-nine weeks left to do it if the mines were to open at once. In other words to insure an adequate supply of anthracite during the coming winter for Canada and the United States the mines would have to produce a weekly total somewhat in excess of their record amount of two million tons a week.
