Practical Breaks.

A collection of nineteenth century
jokelets for twentieth century readers.

BY CHESTNUT BURR.

K—I always value a paper dollar more than a silver one.

M—Why?

K—Because when you take a silver dollar out of your pocket it is nothing more than a dollar; but you find a paper one generally in creases.

K—Mr. Speakout has offended Mr. Hango again.

M—How?

K—He told him that after Easter the umbrella would not keep Lent.

M—So Mr. Blank has found it necessary to stop visiting the grass widow.

K—Why was that?

M—Well you see he became afflicted with the fever.

K—Why can't a deaf man be legally convicted in Court?

M—Because it is unlawful to convict a man without a hearing.
