One of a Hundred Press Notices Received the last ten days

BLACK BLOOD, by Geo. Manville Fenn,
Wm. Bryce, Toronto, publisher.

This is an interesting work with naturalness enough about it to please the realistic school, and with sufficient unusual advantages given its hero to please the romantic. The denouement is well worked up to, and the characters are life-like. The author seems well acquainted with English military life and shows us its bright and gloomy sides. Some of the descriptions are charming, others thrilling. We will not spoil the reader's pleasure by disclosing the plot; we will only say that if you want to spend an hour pleasantly, read this book.

From the Montreal Star, one of the leading papers of the Dominion.
