

A MODEL TOWN.

The police register shows the following police court work for the year just closed: There were nine drunks; eight convictions and three dismissals for violation of the Prohibition Act; eleven convictions for speeding autos; one conviction for looting; two convictions for assault; one conviction for truancy and one conviction for selling milk unfit for human food.—Summerside P. E. I., Journal.

This is a very small crime record for a bustling seaport town.

CAN GERMANY FOOT THE BILLS?

In 1871 Germany defeated France in War and made the vanquished pay the cost of the War, which was $570,000,000; and besides exacted a fine of $430,000,000 and then took the provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, then valued at $320,000,000.

Today the Allies ask no fine of the defeated enemies, but they will ask them to make full reparation for the destruction caused by the War, that they started.

The German Government owns the railways of that Country. The Govt. also own forests, mines, lands, etc etc., valued at $100,000,000,000; so there will be no trouble in the Hun footing all the bills for reparation, that the Allies may present.

SYDNEY'S IRON ORE SUPPLY.

Termination of Old Dominion Scotia Arrangements.

A factor which may have a very far reaching bearing upon future industrial operations in this locality is the arrangement existing between the Dominion Iron & Steel Company and the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Company, whereby the latter had driven and used a slope through the submarine iron ore areas of the former company at Bell Island, Newfoundland, in order to reach their own undersea deposit beyond.

At a cost of about $2,000,000 "Scotia" has, during the past twelve years, been engaged driving through the barren rock from the shore in order to connect their outlying submarine deposits with their surface works and so be independent of the sister company in their mining operations.

The trial slope hitherto used by "Scotia" has now been handed over to the "Dominion" and the acquisition of this slope by the latter will render immediately available millions of tons of ore of higher grade than at present obtained by the company and this without any cost for development by "Dominion" itself.

The production and supply of this ore may well have the effect of considerably enhancing Dominion Steel values and of making Sydney steel a still more important factor in the North American, if not the world, steel trade.—Sydney Post.

NOVA SCOTIA GIRL TEACHING THE YANKEES.

Miss Genevieve Selig, Lunenburg, is teaching school in Glenburn, Bangor, Maine.

Last year Miss Selig was on the teaching staff at Stewiacke, N. S.

The school system in Maine is somewhat different from our Canadian system. There are three terms in a school year, and if not satisfied with the condition, a teacher may leave on a month's notice. The Superintendent visits the school, every two weeks, makes out all returns, does all the grading and corrects all examination papers.

All books used by the pupils and teachers are supplied by the town.

Miss Selig writes that it some times "goes against the grain," to teach young yankees the history of the United States especially any knocks on England.

We wish this clever Nova Scotia girl every success in her new field of labor, and hope in the near future, she will return to "Wield the birch" in the Land of the Mayflower.

WINNING THE WAR.

In the New York Tribune, a brilliant American writer, Mr. Caspar Whitney, gives a lot of helthy, timely advice to a lot of Americans, who are claiming that the United States won the War.

Surely the Allies had not been warring in vain for three years before the United States got into the War.

The United States did not declare war until April, 1917. Then she had to mobilize and it was not until June that the first small expeditionary force landed on the other side. It was a full ten months after this, or in April this year, that the United States troops had their first baptism of blood in the raid by a regiment on the German trenches at Seicheprey, and a month later, May 28, 1918, the 1st Division captured Catigny after an artillery preparation, mostly French, which wiped the little town off the map. After that time Uncle Sam's troops took a more pretentious part, especially in regaining the St. Mihiel salient, and in the operations about Metz, but the part of the fighting front held by them was not at any time comparable with that of either the French or the British. The Hun was still defiant when the United States entered the war but he was more or less groggy and staggering though still defiant and fighting desperately. About all that can be said in truth is that the United States forces took a creditable part in administering the knockout blow.

After reviewing the latter part of the campaign on the western front, Mr. Whitney says:

So let us keep our feet on the ground and look facts squarely in the face. As Marshall Joffre says, our "weight turned the scales," but if the British and French had not been fighting and killing Germans for practically four years, the weight we added in 1918 couldn't have turned the scales this year. And if the British fleet hadn't kept the seas free of German dreadnoughts America, could not have sent food or troops to thus add her weight—and the Germans would have had civilization by the throat.

That was real "freedom of the seas," of which we are now having so much discussion.

And if we had not turned the scales victory surely would have been delayed but not lost. If America had not come in Germany would not have been beaten in 1918, perhaps not until 1919, but even without our soldiers success finally would have come to the Allies, in my judgment.

The German had shot his bolt. The first Marne indicated he could not win, and Ypres and Verdun proved it. He hadn't the stuff in him to beat the British-French combination of grit and fervor. He could never have broken the spirit that held his hordes at Verdun, at Ypres, or that stood between his desperately flung numbers and the Channel ports. And though he had forced them back at times and might again give them anxious days, he lacked both the power and the spiritual quality to deliver a knock-out. His reach and strength and speed were diminishing—and his heart was yellow, is yellow, as his object surrender and subsequent whining emphasize. He's a quitter, as always he has been when up against a real fight, and the British and the French, especially the British, had his number. They would have carried on and he wouldn't have—and they would have beaten him before the end of 1919.

So at the eleventh hour we came with a rush and our weight, added to the superb fighting and endurance of our Allies which had battered the Germans, was just enough to tip the delicately balanced scales in 1918. But we can't claim to have "won the war"; that cannot be said of any one of the Allies.

If England's "contemptible little army" hadn't sacrificed itself through the splendor of its fighting in 1914, there would have been no need for a second German try for the Channel ports, and the first Marne might have been a different story.

If the French army hadn't held with amazing devotion and pertinacity against superior numbers through the long terrible months of 1914-15, the war would have been over before the British got their second army on the ground. And if the British fleet hadn't held there would have been no food or troops from America—certainly not in time to save the cause.

If to any single element, indeed, the success of the war may be attributed, it must be to that same British fleet, without which to control the seas, England could not have moved a man or received a pound of food; and France, alone relatively unprepared, would speedily have fallen under the wheels of the Hun juggernaut.

In the eloquent timely words of Vilda Owens:

"Be humble, O America. Let not The idle boast, the weak vainglory blot The fair white page of our achievement. Let Us not in this triumphant hour forget The years we, hesitating, held aloof, While nations trembled 'neath the cloven hoof."
