

ALL FOR RICHES.

CHAPTER V.

GOLDIE'S ESCAPE.

"The snow is dreadful trying to my eyes!" said one old farmer, brushing away a very suspicious moisture.

"And mine, too, when it first comes," added another, imitating his movement.

Farmer Mellen had reached the centre of the little thicket now, and through the leafless branches of the sapplings the men saw him suddenly spring forward, stoop, as if to pick up something, and then fall heavily to the ground.

"Just as I expected!" exclaimed the man who had first suggested the idea of a guile.

"I guess he's found her! We'd better go out and see," suggested another.

Thereupon they all started toward the pool. Upon arriving there they found Farmer Mellen insensible, lying prone upon his face, with Goldie's red-and-white plaid shawl tightly clasped in his hand.

One attempted to remove it from his grasp, but the fingers were firmly clinched, and they lifted him between them, with the shawl firmly clasped in his rigid hand.

They bore him into the "keeping-room," where Belle had kindled a roaring fire, before which Doctor Brown sat rubbing his fat hands and talking in his usual pompous way, while Belle heard only a confused murmuring sound. She had seen her father start alone in the direction of the pool, and watching the movements of the men, saw them follow him. She was waiting their coming now, dreading she knew not what.

A tramping of heavy feet through the kitchen aroused her, and she sprang to open the door. They bore her father into the room, and laid him upon the broad hearthrug. Doctor Brown bent over him with a great show of wisdom.

"It is Goldie's shawl!" cried Belle, attempting to snatch it from the rigid hand.

Mrs. Mellen entered the room at that moment, and, seeing the shawl, and her husband insensible, fell to weeping and moaning.

All present agreed that poor Goldie had either fallen into the pool, or thrown herself into it in a fit of dejection caused by fever, and many expressions of sincere sympathy were offered, for it was well known that the pool never gave up its dead.

Let us draw the veil of compassion over the sacred sorrow of those stricken parents, and return to Goldie, whom we left kneeling beside the waters of the dark pool.

Her shawl fell off as she knelt there in the snow, but she heeded it not. She was waiting for the answer to her prayer. It came. From the mystic regions of the unknown came the whispered word, "Ariase." It was as if an angel had brushed by her, and stooped to notice her grief. She arose and walked on toward the road. An invisible hand seemed to hold her back. Suddenly she turned, saying softly:

"Not that way—not that way; I may meet with some one who knows me."

INFLAMMATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health. I have no more pain, my nerves are stronger and I can do my own work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me after everything else had failed, and I recommend it to other suffering women."

Mrs. Wm. Seals, 606 W. Howard St., Creston, Iowa.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs. Women who suffer from those distressing ills should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health. If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 30 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. the path is better," and went in an opposite direction.

The sturise found her jaded and worn, at a little farmhouse twelve miles from home. Here she rested during the day, and then walked on to the nearest railway station, where she took the evening express train for New York City.

With her bundle occupying the seat beside her, she did not observe how rapidly the car was filling, until a pleasant voice said:

"Will you allow me to occupy this seat, miss? The package can rest upon my knees."

Goldie simply bowed her beautiful head, and the stranger took the little bundle in his hands, and sat down beside her.

The bundle had been hastily arranged, and tied up in a small red merino shawl that Goldie used to wear to school five years before.

The gentleman could not fail to notice the snowy hair which peeped out from the shawl. A dainty muslin handkerchief, marked "Goldie," lay with the marked and embroidered corner in sight, and, from the abstraction and troubled expression of Goldie's face, the stranger gathered that she was friendless. She was also very beautiful, and men have always been proverbial for befriending lovely young women who are traveling alone, and by the stranger said:

"The cars start in about five minutes, miss. Will no friend come to bid you 'good-by'?"

A painful flush suffused the delicate cheeks of the homesick girl, and for all answer she burst into tears.

"Pardon my thoughtless words, my young friend; I assuredly did not mean to wound your feelings. Let me befriend you, and see you safely to your destination. How far are you going?"

"To New York," was the low reply.

"Ah! then we travel to the same destination. To what part of the city do you go?"

"I do not know, sir."

"What, going to New York alone, and without knowing where to stop? I fear that you will need a friend," he said.

"Oh, sir! I do need a friend. For reasons known only to myself, I have left my home and friends, and must seek another home among strangers. If you will take care of me I shall give you my everlasting gratitude," she replied in a low tone.

The benevolent stranger looked upon the fresh young beauty of Goldie, and to that man of the world her secret was guessed at once, and his plans forthwith arranged.

Before the train reached New York City, Guy Marston had learned all of Goldie's history he cared to know. He had learned that she was leaving her home clandestinely, that her sister was angry with her, and that her lover had left the country about three months previously. That was enough.

He assured Goldie that he had a worthy sister living in New York City, and offered to accompany her to his sister's house, where she could remain until she could form some definite plans for the future.

In her utter ignorance of the ways of the wicked, poor, helpless little Goldie rejoiced that Heaven had sent her such a friend; her heart beat lighter than it had since she had left home.

It was evening still when the cars entered the brilliantly lighted city, and to Goldie, who had never before been in a great city, the place seemed like a dream of fairyland. She clung to the arm of her new-found friend, and entered the carriage with him in perfect silence.

Soon they drew up in front of a splendid-looking house, from whose richly curtained windows the light streamed brightly.

They alighted, and the man said, as they ascended the steps:

"You must not go by your real name now. If you do, your friends will surely trace you here. Call yourself Emma Merle, and do not betray your identity. Ah! unfortunately, the carriage has been driven away, and I have forgotten to take the package containing your clothing. Allow me to make reparations for my carelessness. Accept this purse, and with its contents buy whatever you need."

The door opened while he was speaking, and an elegantly dressed, middle aged woman bowed low in answer to the cordial greeting of the man.

When the door closed, and the trio stood in the elegantly furnished hall, with bright lights streaming over them, Mr. Marston spoke:

"This is a friendless little girl whom I chanced to meet upon the cars. Her name is Emma Merle, and she has no relatives living."

Turning to Goldie, he said: "Emma, this is my sister, Mrs. Felton. She will be very kind to you, I know."

Goldie did not observe the glance exchanged between Mr. Marston and his so-called sister, but she knew that the voice was very soft and motherly which said:

"Poor little homeless one. You shall stay here, as long as you please. My brother and I are all the world to each other, and we will gladly adopt you into our hearts. Shall I show her to her room now, Guy?"

"In a moment. Has Alicia gone?"

"Yes; she went away this morning, swearing vengeance. She—"

"Never mind now. I am glad that you have got rid of her. Put Emma in her room, if you think best," said the man, interrupting Mrs. Felton, who answered:

"Her room is totally unfit for any one. In her fury she tore up the carpets, smashed the mirrors, defaced the pictures, and did all the damage she could."

"Well, you may put Emma in there to-night. She is too tired to care much about her surroundings, and tomorrow I will refurbish the room. Good night, Emma."

And before the girl could understand his intention, he had kissed her forehead.

"Come, Emma," said Mrs. Felton, after she had locked the door through which Mr. Marston had departed.

Goldie looked upon both sides, and behind her, to see where "Emma" might be.

"Come girl!" repeated the woman, and then Goldie remembered that she was "Goldie," no more, only Emma Merle.

She followed the silk-clad Mrs. Felton up the richly carpeted stairs into an upper hall, more elegantly furnished and brilliantly lighted than the one below; and, seeing the light streaming through costly ground-glass doors upon every side, asked:

Be Warned by Headache

It tells of Serious Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys—Try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

You can stop a headache with powerful drugs. But it is not generally wise to do so.

A headache almost always warns you of derangements of the digestive system, the liver, kidneys or bowels.

Awaken the liver to healthful action by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and you not only free yourself of headache, but remove the cause which will soon lead to more dangerous results than headache.

Pains are the result of poison in the system and whether you have headache, backache or aching limbs, you can be almost sure of relief and cure by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They are wonderfully prompt, as well as definite and thorough in action. You can depend upon them, no matter how long-standing or complicated your case. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

"Have you a large family, Mrs. Felton?"

"Only five daughters at my own; but at this present time I have several young friends visiting from the country. Come in here," she continued, throwing open a door at the upper end of the hall, and a moment after turning on the gas.

You need not wonder at the appearance of this apartment. A high-tempered relative of mine has occupied this room for a few months past, but, becoming angry with me, destroyed my furniture. However, the bed is all right. You had better retire, at once, and do not hurry up in the morning. I will come in when I arise. Good night."

Goldie received that woman's kiss with a gasping shudder, and the old, homesick pang smote her heart with renewed power.

She removed her travel-stained clothing and crept into bed, and sobbed and cry, through the whole night. (To be continued.)

"If the sum total of all the happiness caused by people who murder and the sum total of all the unhappiness caused by people who tease could be reckoned which do you think would be the greater?"

Myself. I haven't a doubt but that the latter would make the former look like a molehill beside a mountain.

Sometimes I almost wonder if teasing isn't the unpardonable sin. Perhaps before you decide that I'm altogether talking nonsense I'd better give you an idea of what I mean by teasing.

I know a certain brother and sister who live together and who are exceptionally fond of each other. The brother is an exemplary brother in most ways. He supports his sister in comfort. He often denies himself for her sake. He is very thoughtful and frequently brings her lovely gifts when he comes back from business trips. I know he would feel terrible if anything should happen to her and I am sure she adores him.

And yet their home is not a happy one? Why?

Because he will tease her. She has an unfortunate trick of mixing up names, and saying just the exact opposite of what she means.

For instance, she will say, "I think I'll wear my thick dress, because it is so warm," when she means "so cold."

Or, she will be telling about a call from her cousin Ruth, and half the time she will refer to Ruth as Anne, who is her older sister.

Now what the means is almost perfectly obvious. And yet the brother is never satisfied to tolerate make the mental correction, and let it go at that. He always laughs, an irritating, nagging little laugh, and says sarcastically,
