LADY LAURA'S RELEASE

—OR— THE STORY OF A SPOILED BEAUTY.

CHAPTER XVII.
Lady Laura was immovable; and, seeing that, Mr. Sansome said no more. He waited at Rood House until its master returned, and spent some few minutes in conversation with him; and the opinion he formed of the handsome captain was anything but a favorable one.

"It will be better, Laura, darling, not to say anything about the will to Angela," Captain Wynyard suggested to his wife; and she did not, just then.

CHAPTER XIX.
"Plenty of invitations!" said Captain Wynyard, laughingly, as he looked over the pile of cards on the drawing-room table. "Countess Rawson, 'Lady Herbert, the French Embassy, 'The Duchess of Pemburn, 'Lady Scarborough—an embarrassment of riches—Lady Kinloch, to meet a royal duke! We must go there; I have not seen Lady Kinloch for an age."

"We can manage three in one evening," said Lady Laura. "I know some who can manage ever more."

The captain laughed. He was in the best possible humor, and the prospect of seeing Gladys Rane once more added greatly to his delight. He had resolved to see as much as he could of Gladys; but he had also resolved to be very cautious in his conduct. He longed with all his heart to call on Lady Kinloch, but he knew it would be more prudent to refrain. If he wished to enjoy Gladys Rane's society, he must be careful how he proceeded. He would not put it in any one's power to say that he rushed off to Palace Place on the first day he was in town; but would wait and meet Gladys at Lady Kinloch's ball.

Vance Wynyard did not attempt to repress the love he felt for the charming niece of Lady Kinloch. He knew nothing of self-restraint or self-control; he had never been in the habit of practicing either. If he wanted anything, he obtained it, no matter at what cost. He never admitted to himself the unwelcome fact that his desires and interests were identified with his wife; that, in common honor, he was bound to love

CORNS

Lift Off with Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freemore" on an itching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Truly!

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freemore" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation.

soulless and insane woman I have ever met. She has never abused me for five minutes since we have been married. She thinks of nothing but making me costly presents and giving me the whole of her tiresome society."

"I understand," said Gladys, softly. "I was obliged to marry for money," he urged, apologetically; "and certainly my wife is all that any man could desire, except that she is a great deal too affectionate; but—Well, I must not complain; no man can have everything. Life at home bores me. Gladys, you will take compassion on me; you will let me come and see you sometimes?"

"Yes; but you must not come too often, Vance. My aunt will not like it."

"I wish your aunt were at Timbuctoo!" he said, earnestly. "In that case I should probably be with her, so that you would not gain much," she replied, with a forced smile.

"But, Gladys, you will be kind to me—you will let me spend some of my time with you? I know I must not come here too often; but there are many other places where we can meet."

"But Vance," she said, sadly, "how will it end? You know it is useless; you know that I must not learn to care for you more than I do. It will make me only the more unhappy. How will it end?"

"Never mind the end, Gladys; we are far enough from that. I hope to be kind and generous to you. You know that the only real pleasure I have in the world is being with you; and why should we deprive ourselves of what is a great pleasure to both? Remember our compact of friendship was made for life."

"Yes, friendship," she repeated, hesitatingly.

"No one has ever defined the limits of friendship yet," he said. "Of course I know we must be prudent, careful, and I should be sorry to do anything which would draw public attention to us; but we can have many a pleasant half hour together, if you will consent."

"It is always a pleasure to me to see you, Vance—you know that; but we must—"

She did not complete the sentence, for the music of a fascinating waltz reached them.

"You will give this waltz to me?" he said.

"I could not refuse," she replied. And the next moment Lady Laura Wynyard, crossing the ball-room to speak to her hostess, saw, to her great surprise, her husband waiting with Gladys Rane.

Gladys Rane and Captain Wynyard were old friends who had danced together a hundred times before, and would in all probability dance together a hundred times again; there was nothing surprising in it. But any one who saw Lady Laura Wynyard when her eyes first fell on the pair would have thought that something terrible had occurred. Her face grew perfectly white, the color died even from her lips, and her eyes gleamed with a strange light. She stood watching them in silence for a few seconds, and then passed on. There was nothing unusual in their manner; but it seemed to her as though she had received some deadly wound. Then she tried to laugh herself out of her unpleasant thoughts. There was nothing in it; her husband was merely with an old friend. Yet, at that moment Lady Laura's martyrdom began.

"Gladys!" he said; and then all further speech failed him.

"I knew you would come," she whispered.

She laid her hand on his arm, and they walked away together. For some moments there was perfect silence between them; then Gladys spoke.

"This is the first time I have seen you since your marriage, Vance. I was in the church. I witnessed the ceremony."

"I wish to Heaven that it was you who had been by my side," he said, in a low voice.

"Are you happy?" she asked; and her voice trembled.

"Happy!" he cried. "I am happy enough, so far as money and luxury can make a man happy; but I am horribly tired of all the rest."

Terrible Weeping Eczema.

For the year 1909, I suffered with weeping eczema on my hands which caused me very much pain and worry for I could not use my hands for but very few things. I tried many remedies but they all failed to give me any relief and I was obliged to give up my work and came south at the same time when I used any preparation recommended to me but my hands continued to get worse until I was told to try D.D.D. Prescription, also soap, which I at once did. A great relief was given me and when I had used only a dollar bottle my hands were healthy. I am indeed very thankful for your splendid prescription and may its fame spread world wide is the wish of MRS. E. HAYES, 22 Sunset St., Hamilton, Ont.

Ask your druggist and he will tell you what D.D.D. Prescription has accomplished in your own neighborhood. Your money back unless the first bottle relieves you.

D.D.D. Lotion for Skin Disease

Just Folks.
By EDGAR A. GUEST.

FATHER TO SON.
Come and tell it all to me,
Tell me how the shame occurred;
Tell me, whatsoever it be,
Let me have it every word.
I can spare you many a blow
If you'll let me know.

Son, don't ever be afraid.
Come to me and let me hear
Every blunder you have made,
Come to me and have no fear;
I can save you many a fall
If you'll only tell it all.
Seek no stranger's counsel then,
You've no truer friend than I.
Never turn to other men,
Never hide behind a lie;
Come and let me know the worst,
Tell it to your father first.

This one pledge I ask of you,
Whatsoever may befall,
I shall get the truth from you,
You will trust me through it all;
Tell me what has happened and
Have no fear, I'll understand.

When in trouble come to me,
Come to me and have no fear;
Always let your father be
First of all your tale to hear.
If desired, let your head in shame,
Come and tell me just the same.
Worse than all the wrongs you've done
Should I learn some day, my son,
That you were afraid of me,
Hurt and crush me if you must,
But don't rob me of your trust.
