cavil with the record made in recent years. Marked progress has been made by the city. Indeed, it may safely be said that no city on this continent, or probably in the British Empire, has been better ruled than this London of the new world. There has been no jobbery or frittering away of the people's taxes. The expenditures have been made, almost to a dollar, where the public welfare in the various wards most demanded, the population has been steadily augmented, and in the near future recent needed outlays will prove valuable assets, for they will increase the number of our taxpayers. and add to the value of property, thereby reducing the general tax burden.

Those who, for purposes of their own, represent London as a backward community-as almost wholly given over to wickedness, and its representative men a disgrace to it-not only misrepresent the standing of the community, but unjustly treat a very deserving body of men.
