Mrs. Carew Not to Hang, But Sent to Prison for Life-A Parallel to the Maybrick Case -Both Poisoned Their Husbands

Now that the death sentence of Mrs. Edith Carew has been commuted to life imprisonment by Sir E. M. Satow, the British minister to Japan, the case is an exact parallel of the more famous Maybrick case of London. In both cases the husband was accustomed to consume large quantities of poison; in both the widow was not suspected until some time after the victim's death; in both the drug used was arsenic; in both letters were found from another man to the wife anticipating marriage with her; both women were sentenced to death and the sentences of both were commuted to imprisonment during ...te. Mrs. Carew's case is, in every detail, quite as interest-

Maybrick has one advantage. She did not tamper with the documentary evi-It is doubtful whether a conviction could have been had in the Carew case had not Mrs. Carew been caught almost in the very act of stealing part of an exhibit of evidence. The missing document was found concealed in the cuff of her pretty jacket. The Carews were members of the fashionable set in the English colony at Yokohama, Japan. They lived in a pretty house on "The Bluff," that quarter of the city set apart for foreign residents. The family had been in Japan since 1890. Mr. Carew-whose full name was Walter Raymond Hallowell Carew - went to Yokohama from Singapore, in India, where he was in the government civil service. After his arrival in the big Japanese town he was made secretary of the Voltabama United Club. Mr. Carew was well-known and very popular, and he and Mrs. Carew were favorites in the best English society in Japan. The case was therefore one of special interest, and owing to its close resemblance to the famous Maybrick case was widely published after Mrs. Carew was put on trial for her life January 5. twenty-nine, of good English family. Her father is the mayor of Glastonbury, in Cornwall, and before her marriage to Walter Carew in May, 1889, she was Miss Edith Mary Porch. She was a charming girl, and although her husband was fifteen years older than she, the match was considered a happy one. Carew's family belongs to the best gentry in Eng-His father is Major Carew of Exmouth, in Devon, and the dead man was an Englishman of the sturdy athletic type. He met his wife at a ball in the country, loved her, and after a rather short engagement they were married. Carew's family was not without political influence, and the young man was given a desirable position in the Indian civil service. After one year's residence in India an opportunity presented itself for better advancement in Yokohama, and thither the couple went to live. Mrs Carew was rather vain of her beauty and her talent was an amateur of he stage. and she as widely admired in the English colony for both. One day last October Mr. Carew was suddenly stricken with illness. The family physician was sent for, and he was puzzled with the patient's symptoms. His medicines seemed only to make the malady more pronounced. The doctor advised that Carew be taken to the marine hospital. The advice was followed and the Englishman soon afterward died legal machinery in motion, and the coroner was called in. The testimony at the inquest was remarkable. It was found out from Mary Jacob, a nursery governess in the Carew household, that Mrs. Carew was in the custom of purchasing large quantities of arsenic from Japanese druggists. Just before Carew's death he mistress had sent her for an extraordin arily large quantity of Fowler's solution. a preparation of arsenic, and for sugar of This testimony aroused suspicion, and from that moment Mrs. Carew wa never clear of doubt. Miss Jacob, in her testimony before the coroner, said that the druggist had asked her for what purpose her mistress wanted so much deadly poison. The wo man said she did not know, whereupon the druggist told her that Mrs. Carew had bought considerable quantities of arsenic the day before and the day before that, too. Miss Jacob did not inform Mrs. Carew of the conversation with the chemist, but did tell Mrs. Carew's brother, Mr. Porch, who expressed surprise at the impudence of the man. Mr. Porch did not seem to be struck with the significance of his sister's having bought so much poison. The governess testified that Mrs. Carew alone attended to the work of nursing her husband. The servants of the house had no part in this work. It was the wife who administered all the medicine. Mr. Porch was often in his brother-in-law's room to inquire after his condition. Mr. Porch himself testified that he had often seen his sister administer medicine to Carew, and it was otherwise shown in the evidence offered that at least three ounces of Fowler's solution had been used in the Carew house within three days.

The case seemed to be somewhat com plicated by the testimony of the widow herself. She told of a mysterious woman veiled in black, who had called at the house to see her husband. This woman, she said, was a certain Annie Luke, with whom Mr. Carew was supposed to have had a liaisen before his marriage. The widow said that this woman had followed Mr. Carew to Japan. She produced a written by the mysterious woman, in which reference was made to "the foolish The police made every effort to locate this Annie Luke, but failed completely. It was shown that the veiled wo-man had once called at the Carew house during the absence of Mrs. Carew. but it was believed that it was Mrs. Carew herself, en masque. In the letters sup-posed to have come from "Annie Luke," that mysterious person hinted at suicide. but no trace of her could be found The veiled woman is believed to be a pure fabrication of Mrs. Carew's to divert suspicion from herself.

An interesting feature of the case is contained in certain letters from Mr. Dickinson, a member of the branch Hong Kong bank at Yokohama, in which Dickinson entreats Mrs. Carew to secure a divorce from Carew and promises to marry her as soon as she shall succeed in doing so. The coroner's jury returned a verdict saying that Carew had come to his death at the hands of some unknown person, but popular feeling ran high against the widow, and a warrant for her arrest was issued. She was tried before the British consular court. In process of trial the fact was disclosed that letters supposed to have been written by "Annie Luke" were inscribed upon paper that Mr. Carew was in the custom of using in his correspondence. A number of fragments of a torn sheet which had been collected by the governess and sewn to gether were produced and found to have been one of the "Annie Luke" letters. During the proceedings in court one of the letters was missed. The judge ordered the door locked and that a search be made. The missing letter was found concealed in the cuff of Mrs. Carew's mantle, and this sensational discovery had a very damaging effect upon her case. The two attorneys who were defending her were certain of an acquittal, but when they found their client resorting to this sort of subterfuge they at once withdrew from the case. Other lawyers took up the defense and carried it to the end, but the effect on the minds of the jury by Mrs. Carew's peculiar conduct in concealing part of the documentary evidence spoiled the case, and a verdict of guilty was rendered. Meanwhile Miss Jacob, the governess. was arrested on suspicion, although no one could give a satisfactory reason why. She was held pending the result of the trial of Mrs. Carew, and was released when the verdict came in. It was believed that Miss Jacob was the author of the "Annie Luke" letters, which are now conceived to be a pure fabrication on the part of Mrs. Carew herself. If the system is fortified by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which makes rich, red
