The second game in the Presbyterian League was a good exhibition, King Street Presbyterians and Knox Church, of South London, being the opposing teams, Knox winning out after a hard struggle by the score of 3 to Many of the players who figured 0. At half-time neither team had scored, but in the last half the superior with last year's Brantford team will weight of the Knox team told severely on the light King Street team, and three goals were run in.

Hunter, in goal for the King Street aggregation, put up a good game, and stopped a good many shots that looked dangerous. The King Street team had not played together before, and had been unable to practice. Their performance under the circumstances was a creditable one. Frank Hannibal, a former player in the Lindsay Town League, played rover, and although he has been out of the game for the past two years, he put up a good exhibition, and with a little more practice will be a good one. For Knox, Beattie Martin played a good game, while "Baldy" McQueen also made a good showing. The Knox defence was a strong one, and the King Street players were unable to break through it.
