MILLER & HOHMEIER

PRECAUTION

By
J. Fenimore Cooper

Lord Moseley turned from the window with that collected grace which so well-loved, and so well knew how to assume, to receive her noble visitor. Lord Bolton was a bachelor of sixty-five, who had long been attached to the court, and retained much of the manners of the old school. His principal estate was in Ireland, and most of that time which his duty at Windsor did not require he gave to the improvement of his Irish property. Thus, although on perfectly good terms with the baronet's family, they seldom met. With General Wilson he had been at college, and to his widow he always showed much of that regard he had invariably professed for her husband. The obligation he had conferred, unasked, on Francis Ives, was one conferred on all his friends, and his reception was now warmer than usual.

"My Lady Moseley," said the earl, bowing formally on her hand, "your looks do ample justice to the air of Northamptonshire. I hope you enjoy your usual health."

"Then, waiting her equally courteous answer, he paid his compliments, in succession, to all the members of the family, in a mode undoubtedly well adapted to discover their several conditions, but not a little tedious in its operations, and somewhat tiresome to the legs."

"We are under a debt of gratitude to your grace," said Sir Edward, in his simple and unheated way, "that I am sorry it is not in our power to repay more amply than by our thanks."

"The earl was, or affected to be surprised, as he required an explanation of the living at Bolton," said Lady Moseley, with dignity.

"Yes," continued her husband, "in giving the living to Frank you did me a favor, equal to what you would have done had he been my own child, and unsolicited, too, my lord, it was an additional compliment."

"Not unsolicited, Sir Edward. I have no quip, and my better fortune allowed me the acquaintance of my present rector, for some years past, and what a sense of justice requires, I should say was granted to an applicant to whom the ear of royalty itself would not have been denied."

"It was the turn of the Moseleys now to look surprised, and Sir Edward ventured to ask an explanation."

"It was my cousin, the Earl of Pendennis, who applied for it as a favor one to himself, and renewed, as is a man not to be refused anything."

IN FIRST CLASS RESTAURANTS
The delicious bread served generally comes from this bakery. The proprietors won't be bothered with baking when they can get such fine bread from us. The same say with pastries and cakes. Why not follow their example with a trial anyway. Both you and we will be satisfied with the result.

He now rose to take his leave, and on bowing to the younger ladies, laughingly repeated his intention of bringing his cousin (an epithet he never omitted) Pendennis to their feet.

"Do you think, sister," said Lady Moseley, after the earl had retired, "that Denbigh is of the house of Derwent?"

CHINAMAN AGED 145.
Dr. Cho-Choy, a Cultured Celestial, Arrives in New York.
NEW YORK, June 30.—Among a party of seven prosperous Chinamen who arrived in the first cabin of the Ward Line steamship Mexico on Friday, and who landed at the Battery yesterday in bond for Canada, was Dr. Cho-Choy, 145 years old. According to the Ellis Island officials the doctor lives on water and some special food that he carries in tablet form around his neck.

Dr. Cho is a Manchu, and he was born at Shan Hai Kwan, on the borders of Manchuria, where the great wall of China runs down to the sea-shore on the gulf of Pe Chi Li. He has no pigtail nor any hair at all upon his head, but appears to be in good health. He spoke "pidgen" English of the sort taught to the Canton merchants by the traders more than 100 years ago. Like most Manchus, Dr. Cho is a tall man. He is more than six feet in height, notwithstanding a slight stoop. He has been practicing medicine in Eba for fifty years among the Chinese there, and has acquired considerable wealth. It is said the Chinamen are going to Canada to visit relatives.

Farmer Badly Hurt.
KINCARDINE, Ont., June 30.—A day evening Henry Ray, a well-known farmer of the fourth concession of Huron, was run over on the tracks about 11:30 o'clock. He was lying home in the middle of the road near a garden party at Lurgis, when a team ran him down in the dark and injured him severely.
