

tigny burns in the ancient chapel of the Ursulines; while the ruins of Beaumanoir cover the dust of Caroline de St. Castin; and Amélie sleeps her long sleep by the side of Heloise de Lotbinière, this writer has neither courage nor power to deviate from the received traditions in relating the story of the Golden Dog.

The End.