thers, John and Charles Wesley, with Richard Pilmore, were one evening holding a twilight meeting on the common, when they were attacked by a mob, and fled from its fury for their lives. The first place of refuge that they found, after having been for some time separated, was a hedge-row near at hand, behind which they hid a few minutes, protecting themselves from serious injury by the missiles that fell like hail about them, by clasping their hands above their heads as they lay with their faces in the dust. As night drew on, the darkness enabled them to leave their temporary retreat for a safer one at some distance. They found their way at last to a spring-house,

"JESUS, LOVER OF MY SOUL."-The bro- where, in comparative security, they waited for their pursuers to weary of seeking them. "Here they struck a light with a flint stone," dusted their soiled and tattered garments, and after quenching their thirst, bathed their hands and faces in the water that bubbled from the spring and flows away in a sparkling streamlet. Then it was that Charles Wesley was inspired to write "Jesus, lover of my soul," with a bit of lead which he had hammered into a pencil. These circumstances beautifully illustrated the hymn, giving to almost every line a reality that make it peculiarly significant to every loving Christian heart. They had fled before their enemies, and found shelter from danger. He sang:-

> "Jesus, lover of my soul, Let me to Thy bosom fly."
