CHAUTAUQUA.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF A GREAT IDEA.

IN the south-western corner of the State of New York, almost midway between Cincinnati and New York City, is a crystal lake. Though twenty miles long, and navigated by twenty steamboats, it is set in the very top of a high range of hills which marks the melting away of the Allegheny Mountains into the dividing ridge between the watersheds of the St. Lawrence and the Allegheny River. Up there glitters Chautauqua Lake, like a solitaire diamond set in America's finger ring. The great upper currents of air, untainted by miasma or any of earth's exhalations, in their grand sweeps from the Sierras to the sea, give it the kiss of health and comfort, and it dances in laughter.

Chautauqua is a place of work and study—it is also a place of rest and recreation. Other summer resorts undertake only to provide recreation, and leave their visitors to provide the occupation, which habitually busy men must have. The result is that at most summer resorts people who are not willing to plunge into recreation to the extent of dissipation are sure to be bored; those places hold out the two alternatives of ennui or dissipation to all who have not learned the art of "redeeming the time."

Chautauqua neither proposes to give his satanic majesty any chance to furnish occupation for idle hands, nor to itself lay temptations in the way of its guests. It undertakes to solve the problem of combining rest and work in such proportions that every nature shall be satisfied, shall be kept employed and be given healthful rest.
