

large pages of five or more than 3,500 pages a year, the subscription price is low; while for $10.50 the publishers offer to send by one of the American $4.00 monthlies, or weeklies with The Review, for a year, both postpaid. Little & Co., Boston, are the publishers. The March for March contains the usual choice illustrations with interesting reading matter. Two of the most valuable articles are "My Autograph Book," illustrated with letters and autographs of many eminent men; and the "Land of the Midnight

Sun" (New England Monthly) for March is an admirable number, both in illustrations and reading matter. The opening article is "Harvard College During the War of the Rebellion," and other good articles are: "Early History of Electricity in America," "A Master from the States" (a capital school story) ... The Kindergarten (Chicago) for March has a beautiful frontispiece, entitled, "Our Nursery," containing a group of happy children who are being instructed in the principles of Froebel's teachings.

It is a perfect model of the human body, the largest so far as to be used in the laboratory. It is a perfect model, exhibiting the general anatomy in all its parts, and is made of a material which is mounted on a base 18x6 inches.

The manikin has been designed and constructed by an artist who has had many years' experience in making anatomical drawings, and made the original designs for this manikin, and is now the property of the publishers of this city and the best foreign and American publishers.

In addition to the illustration of the body there are a number of special manikins of various parts, mounted on the same base, and some of them much larger than the main manikin, showing the effects of stimulants and narcotics on the system, and the effects of the brain on the nervous system.

When the manikin is closed together, it is a book, and when closed is about eighteen inches square.

The manikin is a key to the physiological functions of all the parts, and is a complete text-book, and is independent of any other work.

For schools this is a very valuable work, and contains nothing but what is proper to be taught in the schools. It is a valuable work for class use, and of such size as to be convenient.

AGENTS WANTED. We desire the services of Agents in every town for the introduction of our new manikin. We offer liberal terms, and to men or women who are capable of the work, and are willing to give steady employment in a paying business. For particulars, write to us, giving your name and address. The low price of the manikin is a great inducement to its sale. With Material complete, $12.00. Sent postpaid, and freight free. Address: FOWLER & WELLS, Publishers, 175 Broadway, New York.
