Confederation thus remodeled to establish a balance of the forces that form our country and to satisfy to a greater extent Quebec's aspirations is, I feel, the only real hope of the French-Canadians. It is the only way to a mutually acceptable compromise. Co-operative federalism is half-way between tutel federalism, which existed until 1963, but which is no longer acceptable to the French-Canadians, and confederative federalis which is no longer satisfactory for present-day problems and which the English-Canadians would not accept.

Silence of the Moderates

We should not forget that the two extremisms which confrom one another at present in our country meet while they are oppose They produce the same fanaticism; they lead to the same catastra they engender one another. They are equally opposed to the composed to the composed to composed to the day we refuse to accept compromise in our personal or collective lives, The virtue of compromise is moderation. And moderation is the only way towards progress without a crack-up, toward evolution without rebellion. Between rebellion and inertia, genuine prog which is usually half-way between the idealism of the élite and: people's realism, always finds a place. For this reason, the si of the moderates is, in the present situation, more dangerous the the war-cry of the extremists.

The silence of the moderates itself threatens the French-Canadian population with separatism. There are indeed two solitudes developing there presently. On the one hand, as Profe Marc-Adélard Tremblay recently said, "the Quebec population read with enthusiasm to the appeal of modernism and adopts wholeheart the new ways of life and the new manners of thinking, so that day by day they come to be more and more like the other North America This was confirmed by a scientific poll several months ago, accord to which 33 per cent of the people from Quebec were in favour of political union with the United States.

On the other hand, and at the same time, the noisiest elem of our flite are adopting the vocabulary, the attitudes and even the behaviour of certain leaders of the new African states.

This ever-widening rift reveals a profound lack of stability within our society and is the measure of the element of artificia in our national feeling. In this respect one might recall the warning given by that great French thinker, Father Delos, in his book "La nation". "The exact proportion", he writes, "between the utterances of the élite and the realities within the masses come tutes the truth and, for that matter, the authenticity, of nation feeling. Because that feeling must be aroused, how easy it is for the rousers to become strident and introduce artifice and exagge It follows that those who think through their élite are misled W regard to their own true cultural values and, losing their sense proportion, are weakened and irritated by a sustained and exagges psychological tension."
