

Splendidly Equipped

As the most recently erected sacred edifice in the city, the new Stewarton church is probably the most modern and adequate structure of this character in Ottawa.

The approximate cost is estimated by the building committee to be $30,000.

The seating capacity is in the neighborhood of 1,200.

While it will be one of the largest churches in the Capital, it possesses the additional advantage of being able to employ the former building, which has been connected with the new, as a Sunday School hall. But, should the available space seem somewhat beyond the present need, the time may not be far distant when the rapidly increasing growth of the Stewarton congregation may once more tax this building to its utmost.

The church is of the perpendicular Gothic type, very common in the older cities. The designs were drawn by Mr. J. P. MacLaren, architect, this city.

It is substantially constructed of native rough limestone.

Facing on Argyle Avenue, its main entrance is from that street. Another entrance leads in off the Bank street corner.

One strong feature of the church is undoubtedly the entrance, there being no other exactly like it in the city. Triple doors open into the porch, or vestibule, and from these the inner doors at either side of the vestibule lead into the interior. Two little porches under the towers, which rise at either corner of the facade, afford entrance either to the galleries or to the church.
