

“Religion cannot prevent losses and disappointments, pain and sorrow; for to these in this imperfect state we must be liable; nor does it require us to be insensible to them, for that would be impossible; but in the midst of all, and even when all earthly pleasures fail, it commands, it instructs, it enables us—to be happy.”

THE END.

LONDON:
Printed by A. & R. Spottiswoode,
New Street-Square.