Mount Pleasant railway line. The plans for the latter were also approved by the toand's engineer.

The judgment sets forth the objections raised by the company. The first which was disposed of adversely to the company at the public hearing, was that the board nad not yet approved of the project of a municipal railway on the streets which the plans showed it was the intention of the city to construct the proposed line.

To Gross Yonge Street.

The second objection was based on the ground that the plan showed that the proposed municipal railway was to be carried across Yonge street. It was contended that the crossing of Yonge street by the city with its line would be an invasion of the rights of the company.

The judgment of the board deals with the differences in meaning of the publishes to bindid "upon and along," It was held, cowever, that the quadrilateral intersection at Yonge and St. Clair streets must, in the Mount Pleasant line, be considered as part of St. Clair avenue, Consequently as the city has the right to build a railway on St. Clair avenue the objection was over-ruied.
