ALBERTA COLLEGE GRADUATES FIRST WOMAN AGRICULTURIST

Edmonton, Alta., June 24.—(By mail.)—The degree of bachelor of science has been awarded Miss Sheila Maryatt, the first woman graduate in agriculture from the University of Alberta. She completed the prescribed three-year agricultural course with honors in a class of several hundred men.

Miss Maryatt, sister of the Hon. Irene Parly, minister without portfolio in the Alberta Provincial Cabinet, has announced that she will take up quarter section near Alx, Alta., and will apply scientific methods to the land. Miss Maryatt believes that women can succeed as farmers just as well as men.

Government statistics based upon census figures show that 15,841 women in the Dominion are operating farms.

Woman a Cathedral Glazier.

London, June 7.—(By mail.)—Exeter, which possesses the only woman stock-broker, has now the only woman cathedral glazier, says a Westminster Gazette item.

Miss Daphne Drake has been appointed to that ancient office by the Dean and Chapter in succession to her father, the late Maurice Drake. Miss Drake has just completed the restoration of the fourteenth-century glass panel recently discovered in Chelsea Old Church.

It is the only specimen of that century's glass known to exist in London outside Westminster Abbey, and is considered the finest specimen of its period.

TRIAL OF FORMER FRENCH EDITOR FOR TREASON BEGUN

E. Judet Accused of Giving Information to Germany During War.

Correspondence is Seized—Aged Man Returned from Switzerland—Threatens Revelations if the Case is Pushed.

(Special Cable to the New York Times and Montreal Gazette.)

Paris, June 27.—Six years after the date of his supposed crimes of high treason, Ernest Judet, former editor of the Paris newspaper L'Eclair, appeared today here for trial. He is now 72 years of age, and it was as stoutly as he could without bringing into debate the names of others, but if he were pushed to it he threatened revelations.

The crime of which Judet is accused is that of having had relations with the enemy during the war, of having revealed important information to the Germans, and of having spread German propaganda.

When Clemenceau came to power in France in 1917 and started his career by clearing out all the Bolos, Almeyras and others, and had Caillaux arrested, Judet was among the suspected.

But before action had been begun he left France and established himself in Switzerland in a villa next door to the German ministry. Letters of von Jagow, chief of the German Intelligence Service during the war, telegrams and documents seized in passage during Judet in France and Swiss newspapers, all these were collected during the past five years and were laid on the table in court today in an immense pile.

The evidence in proving the old man's guilt is going to be a long and formidable one. After the usual reading of the text of the accusation, and statements by the judges, Judet was asked if he wished to make any statement.

"Yes," he replied, "I have an important statement to make. I have come back from Switzerland because my honor was at stake. It is said that I know a lot and will make a lot of money. I am not a traitor. I have been the confidant of men who have been the highest in the land. But they can rest tranquil. I don't seek to make any scandal, and unless I am pushed to it I shall keep silence."

As always in such cases where the accusation is one of treason, the evidence turned almost at once on the question where Judet got his money from. Accusations of having spent enormous sums he described as lies and was silent.

The trial was adjourned until the afternoon when the judge read the accusations made against him, he said, was that he had defended the Republic against all its internal enemies, both on the right and left.

Prominent Witnesses.

The accusation has cited five witnesses, and the defence 27, among whom are one former President of the Republic, Emile Loubet, one former Premier, Pauline, and many other famous names, such as Hanotaux, Cambon, Albert Thomas, and Generals Malettre and Lapeuze.

Judet was editor of Le Petit Journal when that publication enjoyed the largest circulation in France, but he lost this by taking the unpopular side of the celebrated Dreyfus trial.

He became editor of L'Eclair, which declined before the war from prosperity to financial embarrassment.

The editor, who moved to Switzerland early in 1918, was accused of treason in November, 1919, with his friend of 20 years' standing, Hans Borsard, a Swiss, and another friend, Maurice de Rastville, a Frenchman.

The cases dragged on until February of the present year when Judet and Borsard were condemned by default to life imprisonment in a fortress. The assize court presided over by Judge Gilbert, sat without a jury, and as Judet was not represented at the trial the proceedings were purely formal, the accusation being read and sentence pronounced.

Returned to Face Trial.

To the great surprise of all France, Judet, about the middle of February, announced his intention of returning to face trial. He kept his word, doubtless expecting he would be brought into court immediately. But an additional investigation was ordered, during the course of which the defendant refused to open his mouth in his own defence or in explanation.

The only apparent factor that may have influenced Judet to return to meet the charges he previously refused to face, is that Meunier and Mme. de Rastville were liberated on the ground that the case against them had not been sufficiently established. Meunier has since died.

The evidence against Judet falls into two categories. The first consists of the correspondence between Von Jagow, German under-secretary of foreign affairs, and Von Lacken, former attaché at the German embassy in Paris. These letters were found in Brussels after the Germans had evacuated the city.

In them Von Jagow speaks of buying Judet's influence in France for which service the editor is said to have demanded 2,000,000 francs. This amount, according to the accusations, was paid.

In the letters also is reference to

"Plutus," meaning Bossard, who is said to have received more than 2,000,000 francs from the Germans.

The second category is the evidence of Mme. Bossard. The accusation says that before Judet left France she carried on a correspondence with her husband, who in turn passed it to the Germans. Part of this correspondence was seized on the woman as she crossed the frontier. She has recently divorced her husband, so the defence is expected to plead that her evidence is prejudiced.

The only suggested motive for Judet's activities is the financial difficulty in which he is known to have been involved. He has always been a man of means, and his reputation of respectability with Germany. He is a bitter opponent of Clemenceau, and while in Switzerland was writing a book attempting to establish that the former Premier was persecuting him because of his charges against Paul Clemenceau, a brother of the Tiger.

M. Ledue, a lawyer of the highest standing, is defending Judet.
