

The Diamond Coterie.

inspired and the shame that overwhelmed the Lamotte, would be satisfied.

The tragic farce is at an end. The case is given to the jury. Without waiting their places, they return their verdict. Clifford Heath is not guilty; is honorably acquitted.

Relieved by his recent effort, Frank Lamotte is carried from the court room, almost attended by his mother, and carried to the cell where lately Clifford Heath has dwelt a prisoner.

As the procession of convicts moves away from the entrance, an officer approaches Jasper Lamotte.

"Mr. Lamotte, I am very sorry, sir, but you must consider yourself my prisoner."

Jasper Lamotte bows coldly, and signs the man that he will follow him.

The officer turns to Frank, but before he can open his lips, the man makes a dash for it, and in a moment is seen to be running away from the court house.

"There is another pistol in my pocket," says Frank to the officer, "but I have no time to get it."

Horrible words from the lips of a dying man. They are his last. Before the doctor can turn back and reach his side, Frank Lamotte has finished his career of folly, and sin, and shame, dying as he had lived, selfishly, like a coward.

CHAPTER XLV.

"I never before in all my career, brought to justice, a criminal whom I both hated and loved, and justly so."

It is the day after the trial with its strange ending. They are seated in O'Meara's library. Constable, Mr. Allison, Mrs. O'Meara, Sir Clifford, his brother, George Heath, Mr. Baskins, Mr. Baskins, who now appears what he is, a handsome gentleman, about thirty years of age, clever, vivacious, and extremely agreeable.

"The next morning I took unconcernedly the morning paper, and set out on my explorations. As I approached Wardour Park I met a man, who immediately drew me aside."

"This man was an honorable member of the best detective force in the city; he had too much candor, and he recognized me easily. He entered at the Wardour gate, and I sauntered on, having found new food for thought."

"This man was a detective, and he was a detective of the highest order. He was a detective of the highest order. He was a detective of the highest order."

"I had heard a rumor, before seeing the man, that he was a detective of the highest order. He was a detective of the highest order. He was a detective of the highest order."
