THE END OF THE SESSION.

of the opposition thought that they century ago. had everything settled for the termination of the session on Saturday. They were easily equal to the task of finishing up the business of the house of commons, but the senate broke from the restraint which members of the other house imposed, and showed its independence of the commons chieftains by continuing to legislate after the hour when Lord Aberdeen was to have presented himself. The governor general is no Cromwell, and did not interfere with the deliberations, even though the senators deprived him of one or two days' fishing. A liberal conservative senator who is a director of the Canadian Pacific company, and Senator Scott, who was charged, wrongfully, as he says, with having been retained by parties interested in the defeat of the railway bill which was before the upper house, have succeeded in bringing about some modifications in the mea-

So the session is over. It was expected to test to the utmost the strength of the government, and to offer to the grit party great opportunities for advancement. The test has proved that the government is a strong one, quite capable of taking care of itself. It cannot be disputed that the ministerial party comes out of the session with increased confidence in itself and in its future. It is equally beyond question that the opposition members on the front benches have never made a less effective fight in parliament since 1878.

THE QUEEN'S PRIZE.

A member of the Canadian team at Bisley has won the great prize of the meeting, or the first time in the history of the national association matches the Queen's prize comes to this country. The intrinsic value to the winner, and the fact that he is for the first time being the champion shot in the empire, makes this honor the height of each rifleman's ambition. Yet, the success of a Canadian in this event would not itself speak as well for the team as the winning of the Kolapore or some other trophy in which a number of Canadians were matched with the like number from other parts of the empire. It happens, however, that in the competition for the Queen's prize other Canadians than the ultimate winner came well to the front. No poses. less than three Canadians were in petition, and must have obtained national association medals with considerable money prizes. Six were in the second stage, and those three who did not get in the last stage would win prizes of $20 each. It is a circumstances showing the closeness of the competition and its uncertainty that of the three who reached the third stage, Private Havhurst, who wins the $1,250 prize, stood lowest in the second stage, his score being 101, while Sergeant Skedden made 102 and Captain Spearing 103. In the first stage, Private Hayhurst had led his two comrades, but even then he went into the final stage a tie with one of them, and only three points ahead of the other. As the prize goes to the highest aggregate in the three stages, the trio of Canadians went into the last contest on nearly even terms. The fact that so many members of the Canadian team were either in the last stage or within a point or two of participating in it, speaks more for the dominion riflemen than the winning of the Queen's prize by Pri- Fredericton Gleaner observes vate Hayhurst, especially as he was an eminent shot before he came to this country. All the same, Private Havhurst is deserving of hearty congratulations, and to the gratitude of the Canadian force, for which he has won such high distinction.

GENERAL LAURIE.

Canada has gained another, good friend in the new imperial house of commons by the election of General Laurie for the Welsh constituency of Pembroke. The general is a Londoner by birth, but has spent more of his life in Canada than in any other country. He came to Nova Scotia in 1861 and has spent some thirty years of his life in Canada. He is married to a Nova Scotia lady, and resided for many years on the farm near Halifax which had been her father's home. General Laurie was twice elected to the Canadian house of commons as the member for Shelburne, He has been warden of Halifax and president of the Nova Scotia board of agriculture. He had a good deal to do with the organization of the Canadian militia and served many years a field officer and as deputy adjutant general in this country. His last Canadian military service was in command of a force in the northwest rebellion. His

THE GREAT CONVENTION.

It is probable that the Boston people are right in describing the recent Christian Endeavor convention as the largest representative religious gathering that the world has ever seen. All the very large conventions of the kind have taken place within a few years. Inter-denominational religious work on any general scale is almost new. It is only in this present generation that the different religious bodies have learned the advantage of cooperation, and they have by no means fully learned it yet. Moreover there are now great gatherings of societies within one denomination, as the Epworth League conference recently held in Chatanooga, and the Baptist young people about meeting in Baltimore This last, like the Christian Endeavor meeting, is one of such magnitude that it can only be held in a great city, capable of entertaining its tens of thousands. Such large representative meetings cannot be essentially legislative councils. The assemblies are too large for deliberation. They are gatherings representing societies which are practically self-governing, and their purpose is to stir up fresh enthusiasm, to exchange counsel and experience and to hear advice and obtain inspir ation from those who are best quali fied to give them. In the interest of good fellowship, as well as of spiritual progress, these meetings are at tended from year to year by ever increasing numbers. Modern applied science now makes possible and easy the assemblage of such conventions as would have taxed the resources of the ago. It is all very modern. In times not remote the only general religious gatherings known were some form of grave and experienced dignitaries considered the matters of the church's good and made decrees for religious government. These were no places for young men and maidens, hardly for the junior ministers or laymen, except, possibly, official members. Perhaps only high ecclesiastical authorities were called together. We still headway before they got the water ties were called together. We still have, and probably always must have, these formal councils for administration and legislation. But in addition there are the new kind of assemblies. where the religious democracy appears in person and works out its own pur-

The loss of the steamship Mexico, from Montreal for Bristol, was one of the circumstances which account for discrepancies in the trade returns. It is learned from the esteemed Moncton Transcript that "there are always peripatetic gobemouches on the Tory press ready to gulp down anything which comes their way." The expression does not do the tory press full justice. A peripatetic gobernouche is a travelling fly-catcher.
