ESTABLISHED NOW IN OTTOSHOOP, WHICH HAD A GOLD BOOM; WAS AN ARMY WONDERFUL CAVES DESCRIBED AS "INFERNAL."

South Africa, the high veldt. The veldt is almost level; sightly rolling, practically treeless. After the wein it will burst into a mass of wild flowers and waving guase, but the rains have not yet come, except those few violent showers that blew down our marquess.

We drove to Ottoshoop, 22 miles, through a cold Scotch mist that hid the distant view. We passed a large fortification that had been held by the British for sometime—a square of stone wall, breast high, with some few sand bags still remaining on top, Tarther on roofess houses appeared shrough the mist, the wrecks of farms. Beside one stood an empty wagon in which the burgher and been sent out from the samp to build himself a home caguin. Nare Ottoshoop the desalation became more apparent. A fine large house on the outskirts of the village had geat garden a feek of gasts was nibling at the walls, saging with unightity holes where door and window trames had been form out to build camp fires for some fifting column. However, the way of all available wood. The S: A. C. sam, water living as house without doors and windows, one hotel was in complete runs, while another was but just repaired. Only woo houses were left untouched in the village. To one of these we done and windows come hotel was in complete runs, while another was but just repaired. burgher camps are flying hither and thither over the country, trying to find places to settle. We had them every day of the week at the Malmam hotel, doctors, druggists, accountants, men who are willing to settle down on farms. We did best to beem Otteshoop as a coming mining town, but I'm afraid a professional man would starve with the present population. To every one of them we showed off the caves, to which we will soon have squattere' rights, if we keep on.

The Caves at Ottoshoop.

After the first race luncheon was spread in the stage coach, and the ambulances, and everyone made merry.

The races, of course, are run on the English plan, all riding races. The most interesting, to me, was the Lloyd Lindsay competition. A team of four horses, ridden by S. A. C. men, rode over the course, jumping a hedge in one place and a bar in another. It was fun to see them try to keep the horses strictly abreast when they went over the obstructions. One team did very neat work, never jarring the bar they jumped; others knowled it over.

fairly easy, after you have been up a tree to crawl down again, but to go it blind down a brand new tree is rather terrify-ing. I must record that, of all the people was an all day journey, as the poor week doorkey had a heavy load, and must be outspanned once or twice to rest. Those women know what war means, quite as well as the burghers' wives who were kept and fed by the British while their husbands fought.

Children Get Lesson in Cleanliness

Well, we got the school under weigh at Ottoshoop very much the same as we had done at Setlagoli, only we had a corrugated iron school house this time, and a Dutchman for an assistant. He taught them religion and arithmetic for beginners.

The principal lesson I taught them was to me, and a three wondrous formations could ever make those caves anything but hideous to me.

rest to dabble a little in soap and water. They didn't, so I marched the whole 23 down to the furrow (for irrigation.) The boys lined up on one side and the gris on the other. Each side had a piece of soap, supplied by me, and one very hard and scrapey little brush for the crowd. They labored hard, while I stood by and encouraged, restuing sundry pinafores

To come to school with clean hands and faces. The first day two out of 28 were what you might call clean, and I told the rest to dabble a little in soap and water.

Ottoshoop, for on was a sporty little meeting was held meeting was held Ottoshoop, for one day of its existence, was a sporty little place, the fall race meeting was held there, or rather the spring race meeting in this blooming country. The officers of the S. A. C. worked hard, organizing the races, having marquees put up, enclosing a paddock in a temporary hedge, flagging out the equise. It was in a sheltered valley, with those ever waving reeds in the distant river bed, two miles from the village. We were just beginning to wonder how we should get to the races when the ambulance, of ever pleasant memory, drove up, and the S. A. C. officers from Mafeking invited us all to go over with them. We thought the ambulance would be torn asunder on the way down the hill, but we arrived alive. All the S. A. C. men were there, all the people from the surrounding counencouraged, restuing sundry pinafores from ruination in the flood. They felt so delighted at the infproved appearance of their hands that they also washed their faces, and presented them to me to be dabbed off with one small handkerchief.

That is South Africa for you. Coming and going, all sorts and conditions of men.

CLAIMED TO BE WIFE OF A NEW BRUNSWICKER.

Woman, Arrested in Boston as Disorderly, Makes a Statement.

Boston, Nov. 24—(Special)—A woman claiming to be the wife of a New Brunswicker named Montgomery, was before Judge Dewey in municipal court today charged with being disorderly. She told the judge her husband is at his father's home in Canada ill of consumption. She and Montgomery, she said, were married here in June. For some time she has been living in Chelsea. Montgomery had an office in Boston before he became ill. Judge Dewey discharged the woman.

QUEEN SQUARE, ONE OF ST. JOHN'S BEAUTY SPOTS.

One of the city's beauty spots, a quiet, rest-inviting place, is Queen square.

If you sicken of the odors and clash of the streets; if you tire of lending your jaded presence to the thousands who troop through its grit and grime, if you weary of it all and yearn for some quiet corner where man and his handiwork is not so aggressively thrust before you, there's something about that big green space that seems to beckon kindly to you and say:-

"Come over here, old man, and tell us all your troubles; come on over, now, and let's hear what you've got to say." And if it's a warm day along in summer, you would be exercising a praiseworthy wisdom if you skip briskly over and permit the streets and stuffy offices to do without you, even if it results in a dignified caution from the head of the firm.

St. John, N.B.

Several years ago a large number of trees, known as the split leaf birch, were planted in the square, and are growing into sturdy beauty. There are other varieties, which, together with the flowers that are planted
