

25547

FOREWORD

Is this year a more important year than last for the college men and school boys of North America? There is no doubt that the demands of the world upon educated men are always great, but it is true that our mettle will be tested now.

If we would take a worthy place in life later on, we must train ourselves in Christian leadership now. Are we really leading our school Christian work?

And always and to every man comes the great question as to what he shall do with his life.

Last year, at Northfield, there gathered in the student conference nearly three hundred delegates from many Eastern schools. Away from the rush of daily school life, they met to consider the issues of personal religion and how to get the best preparation for college and for the needy world beyond.

In such an atmosphere a student may be at his best while he is considering the opportunities and privileges of the unselfish life.

In the regular conference groups and meetings are discussed the leading facts of the Christian religion and its mission to the world. Under experienced leaders who are themselves successes in life, the question of choosing a career is taken up.

There is plenty of time for recreation—all the afternoon is free—and for the best of fellowship with the friendly crowd of men from many institutions.

He who is in any way in earnest about his life will find the conference more than worth while.

PAGE THREE

W. L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume 28

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA