time to spare, do you know of anyone who would attend to it for me. I have denied much to get my work as perfect as possible and I do not wish hollow ambition nor empty enthusiasm to get hold of anything I have done, neither do I want my first bearing of my work to be outside the British Empire.

More than anything else, I want to stop poets from coming or Bliss Carman come to complain of people's thoughtlessness when he had intelligence enough to blaze a trail. Some provision will have to be made for these brave souls when governments can fit men out for expeditions.

Your reply by return will oblige.

Yours truly,
Miss Mabel Benson
