"Spring Cleaning"

"Wild Oats hane" attracted a large udience at the Canino last night and will be repeated this afternoon and evening. No one should miss seeing 'Father Joe," the good hearted priest. Mr. Selman gives a fine interpretation of the part. The entire Harkins Players are well cast . Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, of next week, the latest dramatic sensation, "Spring Cleaning," will be the bill. It is said to be one of the most daring plays of the entury. It is from the pen of Frederick Lonsdale, that clever and humorous British writer who has "Aren't We All," and other huge hits to his credit. It played for 288 performances at the Eltinge Theatre, New York. It is a brilliant, worldly, witty, sophisticated comedy marking a new area in the history of the drama. The theme is that of a husband who, neglecting his wife, finds her surrounded by a set of degenerates of various sorts. He pleads with her to free herself from contaminating influences but she refuses to listen to him. Then he hits on a startling scheme to teach her a lesson. The scheme succeeds Meth., Victoria; Edward B. Black- to a certain extent. The young wife wood, Meth. Sup., Wesleyville; Janie and even her blase friends are shock-A. IS HOME STUDY IN THE INTER-take one hundred per cent, of all their studies." comes the answer. This is good, but after all, not the

"To have all the children attending most vital attainment. To make one hundred per cent, on health is of even greater importance. Have you heard of many schools reaching this standard, or of even trying to reach it? In all probability there are more children in Canadian schools to-day who can make one hundred per cent. in their studies than in their health. Some pupils acquire knowledge at the expense of health.

How many hours each day do your children spend in the school-room? In most schools they spend five and a half hours. In this time they are supposed to be actively engaged in study. If the work in the schoolroom is done properly it should be all that is required of the child in the way of study, particularly of young children. During the five hours and a half each day the children are fudoors, sitting usually. Any further indoor study is more likely to hinder than help the proper education of the child. The physical and the mental do overlap, they cannot be separated. If the child is not in a good physical condition, or does not build up a sound body, what good will be his mental equipment to him? If his body is in poor shape he simply cannot acquire knowledge properly. And more often, when he does acquire it he cannot retain it. Even if at that particular stage he is considered "smart," later on he is almost sure to deteriorate in his cleverness. Even if he does not do this there is always part that is that other sure result: If no attention is given to the improving of the only way to ready weak physical body and because he is a "smart child," he is pushed ahead of both teachers and parents, then the inevitable must follow: his physical percentage goes

> It is because of the recognition of these things that in many of the best schools in Canada and, particularly in the United States, no home-work is allowed before pupils enter High School. Usually such schools work on the basis that if homework is needed the teacher is not doing her work properly in the schoolroom, perhaps not alloting or planning her time properly. No home-work under the fifth-grade is required by some of the schools. This does not serve to enhance home ties or strengthen family relations. Each child, no matter how young, should feel responsible for some home-duty, some helpfulness to the other members of the family. Time for this is as important to the future life of the individual as home school work. This, too, is real education.

Oh, my children love home-work; they get out their books almost as soon as they come home. They are ding and writing all the evening.
