R. K. Munkittrick, the editor of his lofty literary style.

Having devoured many works of rhetoric, he finally landed in Harvard. where he determined to begin with his "startling" tactics. He prepared, at great length, an essay that he says be considered a masterpiece of sublime and lofty style. When it came back he was quite astonished to find the following brief criticism written across its face in large blue pencil letters:

There was a big docket at the police Within six months 120 new companies
