Although he has alwayds that they would not "take the stump" during the municipal campaign in defense of the proposed purchase of the London street railway.

Certain of the aldermen are quite frank in their belief that the great probability is that those among them who should advocate too strongly the contemplated deal, will be "snowed under with the bylaw."

Incidentally there is a persistent feeling in civic circles that the suggested project will not even pass the city council, for approval by the rate-payers.
