LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS DEDICATION

Bishop of Gloucester, England, Delivers Inspiring Address On Education.

MAKE OWN HISTORY

"The University of Western Ontario is situated in a rich and populous district. It should grow up with its own history, its own traditions of learning and student life. It will, I hope, make a great contribution to the service of mankind and to the promotion of learning."

Such were the words of the Right Rev. A. C. Headlam, lord bishop of the diocese of Gloucester, England, who preached the dedication sermon in the convocation hall at Western yesterday. Though continuous rain from early morning had cast a gloom over the city and made the road to the new buildings sloppy underfoot, a large number of people arrived at the new buildings long before the service began. The hall, in spite of the day, was nearly filled to capacity.

The lord bishop took for his text the ninth chapter of Proverbs, beginning verse 8, "The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom." Speaking of the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Solomon, his lordship showed that the books were written quite clearly after the code of the Lord had been established. He thought that they belonged to that period in the world's history when in the time of Alexander the Great an era of cosmopolitanism burst upon the universe; in the early days of the Greek period, when services were more majestically rendered, when worldly prudence and worldly orthodoxy could win a fair measure of prosperity for men.

Religion was behind and in the centre of the great conception of wisdom. A new concept for a wider scheme of thought and wisdom began with skill and knowledge, and was passed on to prudence, and was associated with moral strength.

Purpose of Education.
To sum up or to explain a university in one word, the lord bishop said that he would use the word "wisdom." The university's purpose was to build up a nation by sending out generation after generation of men inspired with wisdom. Wisdom was attained through four great elements: first the training of the mental equipment. The purpose of education was not only the acquisition of knowledge. That was only the beginning; the mind should be trained so that whatever the duty was to be fulfilled in after life the mind would be ready to cope with it. This was the reason that a classical education had a unique value.
The mind should be disciplined. It should undergo a serious strain of classical studies. Looking at the literature popular with the great masses of the people today, it might be wondered if the universities had been as effective as they might have been, for the general standard has gone down and a great body of the people seem to be content to read a short paragraph in a newspaper and little beyond.

A rigorous discipline in Latin, followed by Greek, would produce a body of men with far more quickened minds to do a greater work in the world. To science students, the speaker said that they might have recourse to Greek literature to make science more than mechanics, a thing of truth.

Knowledge Is Power.

The second element of wisdom was the learning of knowledge. Knowledge is power, but that gained at the university is only the beginning of what will come after. It is important that the student should acquire the right spirit and method rather than just a mass of knowledge.

The fundamental aim of the university is to have the end desired. The general body of people do not want truth; they want what pleases them, what appeals to them, and they have newspapers giving them the things they like.

The very essence of a scholar, before all things, is a seeking for truth in literature or science; get truth and you get all a university can give you. In a university a student may learn a desire to know what is true.

The third element of wisdom is a knowledge of mankind, not at his worst, but at his best. It is something students would be acquiring all through life. The university is a little world where there are grouped a body of men with particular aims coming from many classes and dispositions. In the university they come across the first knowledge of men, of time, and acquire a freedom and wisdom and prudence of the conduct of life.

Men Spurned Altar.

The fourth element was the fear of the Lord, said the bishop. "If, as we all believe, there is a God who made and rules the world rightly, then the world must be built on righteousness. The ancients noticed that often a man is carried away to a point of success where he spurns justice, revenge comes. Wisdom is not known merely from cleverness, knowledge, it is a disposition which makes people judge rightly in a crisis. We know that no learning, no cleverness, will save people from terrible judgment, if they do not possess the great attribute, the righteousness of God.

In the old days the university was the creation of the church. It grew up under the auspices of the church. The universities sought freedom and it is a great characteristic of the university and men with particular aims coming from many classes and dispositions. In the university they come across the first knowledge of men, of time, and acquire a freedom and wisdom and prudence of the conduct of life.

Civil Service Uses Students.
The university exists to send out year by year a great body of men duly qualified. Looking back in the history of England, one of the great elements that has made it able to face the great difficulties of the last 50 years has been the staffs of the civil service, almost entirely from universities.

The work of the university should inspire students with training to protect them from the temptations of a world where people are anxious for wealth. The bishop then spoke of the able men who had consecrated themselves to the church and religion, and he knew of no life more satisfactory, none more exhilarating than the study of theology.

The lesson was read by J. Bruce Hunter, First Methodist church; the Right Rev. David Williams, bishop of Huron, led in prayer. On the platform were also: Dr. W. Sherwood Fox, dean of the college of arts; C. L. Somerville, Col. T. J. Murphy, Sir Adam Beck and E. J. Miller.

PILOT HOUSE FOUND

Special to The Advertiser. Cleveland, Sept. 28.—Any doubt of the sinking of the whaleback freighter Clifton, with her crew of 28, was dispelled with the finding in Lake Huron yesterday of covers and the forward end of a pilothouse. No bodies were found. Hudson of the steamer Glenclair of the Great Lakes Transportation Company, reported to A. E. R. Schneider, general manager of the Progress Steamship Company, owners of the Clifton, late today that he encountered the wreckage late yesterday about 70 miles from Goderich on the Detroit-Goderich course. The wreckage as described was identified by Mr. Schneider as that of the Clifton.

"We arrived at Goderich at 10:30 a.m. Sunday," the report states. "Encountered wreckage at 4 p.m. Saturday about 70 miles from Goderich on the Detroit-Goderich course. The wreckage consisted of broken hatch covers. In hopes of finding something that could be identified as belonging to some particular vessel we cruised around for about two hours. We finally picked up the forward end of a pilothouse. The pilothouse clock and searchlight were attached."

The clock registered 4 o'clock. Captain Hudson told Mr. Schneider over the long-distance telephone from Goderich, but whether the boat sunk Sunday afternoon or Monday morning is not known. She was last seen passing Mackinaw at 10:20 a.m. Sunday morning en route from Sturgeon Bay to Detroit laden with stone.

The Glenclair was up-bound on Lake Huron last Monday. A gale was blowing from westward when she passed Harbor Beach at 4 a.m., and

German People Liken Cowboys To Slave Drivers

By EDGAR ANSEL MOWBRER. Cable to The Advertiser and the Chicago Daily News, Copyright, Berlin, Sept. 28.—The Deutsche Tageblatt, that ever diverting organ of the Berlin super patriots, has heard from America that Owen D. Young was formerly a cowboy. Instead of regarding this as a title of honor, the Tageblatt, which has branded General Charles G. Dawes as a "thorough scoundrel," sees in this statement of Young's past life a sure proof that Germany is being designated as a "slave colony." Such a spirit is not calculated to make the carrying out of the Dawes plan any easier for foreign agents.

was at its height between 4 and 5 o'clock. A number of large steamers were forced to seek shelter, and in the opinion of Captain Hudson no boat the size of the Clifton could survive the storm if the vessel was more than 40 miles from shore.

Richard A. Harrison, travelling commissioner from the Lake Carriers' association, who will have charge of the work of searching for the bodies of the 28 victims, left for Goderich late today. He is due to arrive tomorrow morning. In the belief that the bodies will be carried to the Canadian shore, a thorough search will be made there.

The farm is located about three miles from Leamington, and the barns were visible for at least eight miles. Many from the surrounding district rushed to the scene in autos and assisted in saving the house, which would have been destroyed but for a southeast wind.

Mr. Latam is widely known as a breeder of racehorses. Fortunately all animals in the buildings were safely removed.
