

teachings of the Bible. In addition to these three courses of Biblical study, there is a course of training in the art of teaching and Sabbath school organization.

The S.S. Teachers' Normal Course. By George W. Pease. The Fleming H. Revell Company. First year; pages 157; price, paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

Each of Mr. Pease's normal courses extend over one year and consist of two parts, one of which deals with the contents of the Bible and the other with the art of teaching. We get a bird's eye view, in the one course, of the Old Testament books, and in the other, of the life of our Lord and the work of the apostles. Along with this are presented the salient points of Biblical geography and history. The sections on the art of teaching contain many wise and useful directions. This book is hardly up-to-date, in that it takes its chronology of Paul's life from Conybeare and Howson with no reference to the later discussions of Ramsay and McGiffert.

Our Sixty-six Sacred Books. By Rev. Edwin W. Rice, D.D. The American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia; pages 222, price 60c.

Bible Study By Books. By Rev. Henry T. Sell, M.A. The Fleming H. Revell Company; pages 273; price, paper, 35c.; cloth, 60c.

These two books agree in recognizing the fact that the Bible is not a single book, but a library containing many books. To say this is not to deny that there is a unity in the whole collection, which can be explained only on the assumption that each Book was written under the supervision of one Divine Person. The two volumes do not treat the sacred collection from the same view point. Indeed, they are complementary to each other. Dr. Rice traces the history of the process by which the Bible, as we have it, came into existence. Starting with the versions now in use, he follows the stream back, until he arrives at their source in ancient manuscripts, seeks to discover the date at which the various writings were collected into one book, describes the circumstances in which each separate book was produced, and gives an account of the wonderful circulation of the Scriptures in modern days. Mr. Sell, on the other hand, takes the various books as they stand and gives a very clear and complete analysis of their contents. The one volume is historical and the other analytical. In both of them the Bible student will find much valuable and interesting information. They might both be used with advantage in Bible classes to supplement the lessons of the International Series. In addition to his Bible Study by Books, Mr. Sell has written Bible Study by Doctrine, and Bible Study by Periods, the purpose and scope of which are sufficiently indicated by the titles; and also Supplemental Bible Studies, containing "a short and comprehensive course of study upon the Structure, Geography, Institutions and Times of the Bible." These also are published by the Revell Company in the same style and at the same price as Bible Study by Books.

DR. WITHROW writes: "Dr. Maclean is rendering important service to his church, to all the churches, by his admirable books on Christian themes. They not only present the very marrow and fatness of the Gospel, but present it in a literary form that will make it attractive to every reader. They are as good in their way as Dr. Van Dyke's or Hamilton Wright Mabie's."
