The stand made by the allied armies means that they are making a combined offence and defence, being content to maintain that attitude until they are reinforced by the army corps returning from the campaign in Lorraine, their chief objective being to prevent the enemy from cutting them off or surrounding them in the meantime. The southernmost flanks of both armies are now about twenty miles from the northermost force outlying Paris. When the left wing of the allies reaches Paris, this will place the forces of France and Britain on a new battle line, running from Paris northeast to Rheims, southeast to Verdun, and south to Belfort. This line would be 250 miles in length. BERLIN PROFESSES CONFIDENCE.
