

Addressed to the Reader.

capable not only of contemplating the Goodness of the Almighty, in his Works and Creatures, but readily Discoursing, even with the most knowing Travellers, and without regarding the danger of treacherous Seas, Winds, Robbers, and a World of Inconveniencies that attend an expensive search into these Affairs; securely Travel in Imagination from Pole to Pole. For to be brief, there is no Kingdom, Province, or Estate, that is wittingly left out of this History or Treatise; and as to what is most material, the Account is considerably large; wherefore recommending it to the benefit of my Country Men, I remain Reader,

Your Friend to serve,

In what I may,

S. Clark.

Of