

§ 125. The Extensions are nothing else than adverbial adjuncts or qualifications of the Predicate, and they may be put into the same classes as Adverbs (see p. 74), according as they mark the when, where, how, and why of the Predicate.

Examples :—

Subject.	Predicate.	Object.	Adverbial Adjuncts.
The village-preacher's modest mansion	rose		near yonder copse (place).
All	met		here (place) on a Sunday-eve (time).
I	knew	him	well (manner).
He	gave	me a book	yesterday (time).
Swallows	appear		spring coming (time).
He	came		to see me (cause).

§ 126. The Compound Sentence.

When a sentence contains only one subject and one finite verb it is called a Simple sentence. Two