License Inspector J. E. Keenleyside, who laid the charge, produced two samples of the cider as evidence, which on analysis proved to contain 4.5 and 4.15 per cent proof spirits, respectively. Counsel for accused argued that the cider was not for sale, but merely for the manufacture of vinegar, and therefore, his client was not liable to a penalty. When informed by the court that a permit was necessary for this operation, he stated that no breweries had such permits, but that his client would obtain one. When the magistrate insisted on having a plea entered to the charge, Mr. Winnett said. "We will have to admit there was liquor on the premises."
