Monday, and found ready purchasers, says The London Daily Mail.

The puddings and pies, which were made in London, were sent out each in its bright little air-tight tin to provide a special treat for the troops. But they never fulfilled the purpose for which they were made and after much journeying and years spent in store they were sent back to London. They were cataloged as "Not fit for human food," and with other goods were sold by order of the London and India Docks Company to defray freight and other charges due, and because they had exceeded the time limit for warehousing.

The puddings and pies, weighed eighteen tons and were sold in lots of thirty-three and fifty cases. Each lot of thirty-three cases fetched it2s. and the bulk of the others 37s. a lot, "They will make excellent food for pigs," sai dan official of the docks company.
