Cost of This War

Military experts regard the probable ost of the conflict in Europe so vast as to be beyond reckoning. They assert it is quite impossible to make even a guess as to the aggregate expenses. The American Civil War expenditure is ordinarily calculated to nave been about a million dollars a day for 500,000 men in the field. Another estimate is that it will cost $1,000 a year per man in the field. Assuming that a general conflict will call into the field a maximum of 20,-000,000 soldiers, this basis would bring the total military expenditure alone up to twenty billion a year, or about $50,000,000 a day.

Army officers point out that the military expense of such a conflict is only a portion of the actual cost. The shrinkage in security values, the stoppage of agriculture, the diminution of manufacturing and other industries and the interference with trade and foreign commerce must all be reckoned with in order to arrive at any approximate estimate of the vast cost of war in Europe.
