We m.: with rather an amusing contretemps while engaged in taking notes at the Station. C. I. Brydges' Palace can had arrived from Metapediac a short time and he, wish two other gentlemen, and his daught ra were leisurely walking the platform when the evening Express arriv ed bringing an unusual number of passengers. Among the rest was a tall. dark distinguish at looking gentleman of French descent who was known to Mr. Brydges

It was evident at a glance that he was no ordinary man. We asked several parties if they cou'd tell us his name, without success. Noticing a stout florid gentle-man (?) who occupied a chair tilled against the wall and was engaged in smoking a FRIDAY, 28th day of SEPTEMBER, cigar we propounded the same question, seeing that, like ourselves, he was evident-ly interested in the stranger. "Do you know, sir, said we, that tall, dark gentle-man who has just passed?" The man looked at us with an eye which was just a triffe unsteady we thought and answer-ed "I do, but do not see any reason why ed "I do, but do not see any reason why I should tell you." He had us there. We could actually give no reason why he should either. We thanked him politely, ventured the assertion that this was a free country and that no man could be compelled to speak, unless he chose; that men differed in their ideas of courtesy etc. We tried to find, out his name but nobody seemed to know him and we presume IRON PIPE. those who do will not be surprised at any rudeness of which he may be guilty.
