

COLLECTIONS ON THE DAY OF HUMILIATION.

These Collections were made in England, and set on foot by Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the stream of benevolence flowed from every class of people, from the very highest to the very lowest.

Thousands of Her Majesty's loyal subjects joyfully followed her most glorious example on this day, and poured in their contributions for the support of an Association which their beloved Queen and His Royal Highness Prince Albert had honored with their first patronage from the first commencement.

It is not for the sake of the noble contributions made on the day of Humiliation that this Association would have been fully established, but for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made.

It is not for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made, but for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made, but for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made.

It is not for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made, but for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made, but for the sake of the noble contributions which have since been made.
