

McGINNIS THE COOK.

We had been at work on a survey in the River East Mountains since early in the spring, and the autumn had found us all disgusted and homesick—all but McGinnis, the cook. Besides, we were taming for news. Our mail and the late papers and magazines should have been sent to us every two weeks, but for nearly two months nothing had been seen of the old trapper.

Every day we expected from the cook a promise that he would bring our letters out to us in case the carrier should arrive while we were at work on the line. Then we would watch impatiently till evening and hurry back to camp, more than half expecting that the post had come in spite of the non-appearance of McGinnis. Expectancy was torturing us. Disappointments repeated every evening for several weeks deeply affected the spirits of the party.

One night after supper we lounged on our camp beds, two of us in one tent, waiting for bed time. The work of the day had been unusually hard and the hours long. We were tired and heavy of spirit to do anything but the little talking that was regularly necessary and to lounge.

McGinnis came over from the cook tent to tell us one of his tales of forty years ago. His stories possessed one rare quality. They were realistic and unexciting. He told of the mountains in the earlier days, but McGinnis played no prominent part in any of them. We were all curious to learn something about the old man, but our curiosity was never satisfied.

Several of us looked at him wondering. Those who were busy paid no attention whatever. The camp dog stretched, went lazily to the opening, then grew suddenly alert and began to bark. Almost instantly ten heads were crowded between the tent flaps.

When the men were secure he looked at Turner. The latter suddenly came to himself and put down his hands. McGinnis took the weapons from his prisoners before they regained consciousness, and with Turner's help got them into the sleeping tent, where there were lighted candles.

There was a sudden movement in the tent, but no one spoke. The boys checked out their coats and put them on. Every one understood what was to be done. Those who owned rifles took them down and provided themselves with cartridges. Every weapon in camp was hurriedly put in readiness for use.

The chief of the party had come over from the instrument tent when our guest arrived. 'What kind of tracks were there?' he now asked. 'I couldn't make out,' the stranger answered.

'Take the lanterns and plenty of candles,' said the chief. 'And, Turner, you, stay to watch camp.' 'I'll stay, too,' said the stranger; 'I've too much to travel. You'll have no trouble finding the place.'

'I'll stay and read, my letter,' announced McGinnis, quietly, to the surprise of every one, for old Morton, the trapper, had been a friend of his in the earlier days. A moment later only the stranger and Turner were left at the sleeping-tent.

The man read it—a child's note of only a few labored lines, but it was of love, but he read it unsteadily, for the cook held a lighted candle before his face, and whenever he glanced up from the page the old man's eyes were intensely fixed upon him.

'Ah, it's had business—had business!' repeated the cook, as he put away his candle. 'Now I know what's in the letter. I think I'll go down and help find out what it all means—all this blood, here.'

Turner grew uneasy after the old man had gone. The stranger said little, but he watched his companion closely and waited till the sounds of the cook's footsteps had died out in the distance. Then he got up, and without halting walked to the tent opening. After standing there a moment he whistled and suddenly turned upon Turner with a drawn revolver.

'Keep still and walk outside,' he said, quietly. Turner obeyed promptly. He had no weapon with which to defend himself, and he was badly frightened. In a few moments a second stranger, lean, raw-boned and taller than the first, came out of the brush leading two horses, one saddled, the other bearing a pack.

The rising moon shed but a dim light along the mountain side; yet Turner saw at a glance that the animal was the old mail carrier. 'They bit easy,' said the shorter man, with a low laugh. 'There's no one at camp but this. Now hurry.'

The last arrival emptied the grips and bags and selected whatever was of value. He also took a couple of pairs of blankets and all the ammunition the boys had left behind them. Then he began to make a pack of what he had taken.

'Never mind that,' said his companion. 'Go over and lay out all the grub you can.' The tall stranger went to the cook tent. The other knelt down, laid down his revolver on the ground, kept his eyes constantly on Turner, and made a roll of what the first had put down.

When he had clinched this onto the pack-bore he marched Turner before him to the flap of the tent. The flaps of the tent were slightly parted but there was no light inside, and everything was quiet. He stopped before the opening, gave Turner the bridle reins and made him keep his hands above his head while at the same time he held the horses.

'Hurry up with the stuff,' he exclaimed, looking into the darkness of the tent. He waited a moment, and getting no answer, pushed aside the flaps and started to enter. But he had put only one foot inside when the sound of a heavy blow was heard, and with a muffled cry he fell forward on his face.

Instantly McGinnis emerged from the tent, and the surprised Turner saw him drag out both strangers, and dexterously bind their hands and feet. A new vigor had come into the old man's frame, a new alertness. There were purpose and positiveness in his every movement as he went about his task.

When the men were secure he looked at Turner. The latter suddenly came to himself and put down his hands. McGinnis took the weapons from his prisoners before they regained consciousness, and with Turner's help got them into the sleeping tent, where there were lighted candles.

That for nearly a week had followed the trail of the two desperadoes. The old mail-carrier, unaccountably delayed, had fallen in their way when they were hard pressed for means of escape and they had shot him for his horse. Then, learning from the letters of our presence in the neighborhood, they had played at a bold game to obtain provisions and had lost.

We felt that we knew McGinnis better after that.

Why Suffer
When Your Agony and Torture Can Be Permanently Banished by Paine's Celery Compound?

Neuralgia Surely Cured by the Great Medicine.
Able Physicians Recommend It.

All physicians, after a satisfactory experience with Paine's Celery Compound, have come to the conclusion that it is a true specific for that merciless tormentor—neuralgia. Neuralgia indicates a low or depressed state of vitality, and nothing so rapidly weakens and exhausts the system as pain that prevents sleep and keeps the body and mind in agony and torture.

Paine's Celery Compound being a nerve medicine and nerve food, it reaches the root of the trouble in a way that no other medicine can do. The most terrible and long standing cases have often been completely cured by the use of a few bottles. Paine's Celery Compound has in thousands of cases saved lives after the best medical efforts failed. If your life is a continued misery from neuralgia, torture, or pain, use at once nature's true nerve medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. Beware of substitutes; "Paine's" is the kind that cures.
