Among the injuries inflicted upon historic buildings in England during recent gales, those suffered by the parish church or abbey of Sempringham, Lincolnshire, were the most serious. Fortunately, although three pinnacles crashed through the chancel roof, accompanied by tons of masonry, the remains of the famous St. Gilbert Priory Church in the nave were uninjured. The sacarium was not so fortunate, and tombstones marking important interments were damaged. The ancient building consists of four massive Norman bays, a perpendicular central tower, and a Norman door, which was found serving the lowly purpose of a dovecote at Laundon House. This has now been included in the porch built a few years ago. Two other fine pieces of work are a fir door, with scroll work in iron,
