We have devoted the greatest portion

We have devoted the greatest portion of to-dny's paper to extracts from the English papers brought by the Assq.

All sorts of rumors are aflost, of an intended dissolution of Parliament, of a condition Ministry, of several resignations of seats by Members of the Lower House, and of an uneasy state generally in the political world. We are inclined to think that there is no truth in any of them; these reports are commonly got up just before Parliament meets. We certainly cannot see why Ministers should resort to a dissolution. They must know—having the result of the last three Upper Canada elections before their eyes—that they are not likely to gain strength by going to the electors; they have the same majority now that they had during the last Session—and Heaven knows that was obsequious enough. They may, however, imagine that certain of their stepporters—shaving before them the fact that they must, ere long, reader an account of their stewardship, and that the mass of the electors are by no means satisfied with the present state of things "Indiana" and so the electors are by no means satisfied with the present state of things "Indiana" and the mass of the electors are by no means satisfied with the present state of things which will either save, or destroy them in the true of their stewardship, and that has motient, and so meditute a step which will either save, or destroy them in the true of their stewardship and that has motient, and so meditute a step which will either save, or destroy them in the true of their stewardship and that they have the same majority now that they have the same majority now that they have the same majority now that they must, ere long, reader an account of their stewardship, and that they must, ere long, reader an account of their stewardship, and that they must, ere long, reader and server the same which will either save, or destroy them are the same which will either save, or destroy them are the same and the same which will either save, or destroy them are the same and the same a
