as more consistent with the federal prin-ciple, simpler and more economical, more likely to give due expression in Parlia-ment to the mind of each Province, than ment to the mind of each Province, than any Dominion franchise; but we propose, if there is to be a Dominion franchise, a more constitutional method of making the liste, and a simpler franchise. I do not wish to force my views on any other Pro-vince, but my opinion is that the best Do-minion franchise that can be devised is residential registered manhood suffrage; and I am for the principle, "One man, one vote." We process also to restore the independence and respectability of Par-liament by rendering impossible the con-tinnance of the shocking state of affairs partly developed last session; a state of affairs which has shocked the community and should of itself ensure the condemna-tion of the Government. I have not time to carry on the estalogue; I must pass to another point. There are important questo carry on the cstalogue; I must pass to another point. There are important ques-tions which are coming up in the near future which are almost present and at cur doors—some of which may become party questions, others which may be best dealt with otherwise. Among such ques-tions I may name the temperance ques-tion, in respect of which the Reform Gov-ornment of Mr. Mackenzie did what it believed to be its duty, and undertock, at ernment of Mr. Mackenzie did what it believed to be its duty, and undertock, at a fitting season, the responsibility of pro-posing a measure which was believed to be the best adapted to the public opinion of the day. At that time those interested in the temperance question pressed, and pressed earnestly on the Reform Govern-ment that it was their duty, as they had the power, to legislate. The Tory party then pressed the same view. Since that time it has appeared, as almost always happens in the train of a great testaute, that whether by unhappy interruptions or diversity of meaning to which the language was fairly open, or by oversight, practical difficulties exist in the working of that Act, and for some years efforts, I regret to say abor-tive, have been made to procure a remedy exist in the working of that Act, and for some years efforts, I regret to say abor-tive, have been made to procure a remedy for these practical difficulties. Eut the Government now in power has not under-taken the duty of introducing or even of facilitating the amendatory legislation necessary to give effect to the declared intentions of Parliament and the geople, in the same manner in which the Govern-ment of Mr. MacKenzie undertook the dis-charge of the duty incumbent upon them when they were in office. Nor, I must say, have I observed the same pressure put on the Tories which was put on the Reformers in this regard. The question, however, has advanced. It has assumed still larger proportions, and in its wider phase of to day it now presses on our minds. I hope and believe the Young Liberals will be formed very largely on the side of temperance. Again there looms up, ever nearer, the great question of one devotional future. And connected with this are various other questions of great magnitude. There is also the ques-tion of the relations of labor to capital, a vass subjest now calling for our exmest thought.
