rected to the glaring, greenish-grey eye of Simon.

"Now," said he, doubling his great, heavy fist into something resembling a blacksmith's hammer, "d'ye see this fist! Heft it!" he said, bringing it down on Tom's hand. "Look at these yer bones! Well, I tell ye this yer fist has got as hard as iron knocking down niggers. I never see the nigger yet I couldn't bring down with one crack," said he, bringing his fist down so near to the face of Tom that he winked and drew back. "I don't keep none o'yer cussed overseers; I does my own overseering; and I tell you, things is seen to. You's every one on ye got to toe the mark, I tell ye; quick, straight—the moment I speak. That's the way to keep in with me. You wan't find no soft spot in me, nowhere. So, now, mind yourselves: for I don't show no mercy!"

The women involuntary drew in their breath, and the whole gang sat with downcast, dejected faces. Meanwhile, Simon turned on his heel, and marched up to the bar of the boat for a dram.

"That's the way I begin with my niggers."

"Indeed!" said the stranger, looking upon him with the curiosity of a naturalist studying some out-of-the-way specimen.

"Yea, indeed. I'm none o'yer gentlemen planters, with lily fingers, to slop round and be cheated by some old cuss of an overseer ' Just feel of my knuckles, now; look at my fist. Tell ye, sir, the flesh on't has come jest like a stone, practising on niggers—feel on it."

The stranger applied his fingers to the implement in question, and simply said—

"Tis hard enough: and I suppose," he added, "practice has made your heart just like it."

this desi treacherously, and holdent thy tongus when the wicked decoursed the man, that is more righteous than he 1"—Heb. i. 13."

On the lower part of a small mean boat, on the Ried River, Tom sat—chains on his wrists, chains on his feet, and a weight heavier than chains lay on his heart. All had faded from his eky—moon and star; all had passed by him, as the trees and banks were now passing, to return no more. Kennieky home, with wife and children, and indulgent owners; St. Clare home, with all its refinements and aplendours; the golden head of Evg., with its saint-like eyes; the proud, gay, handsome, seeming careless, yet ever-kind 5t. Clare; hours of case and indulgent leisure—all gone! and in plate thereof, what remains?

It is one of the bitterest apportionments of a lot streety, that the negro, sympathetic and assimilative, after acquiring, in a refined family, the tastes and feelbings which form the atmosphere of such a place, is not the less liable to become the bond-slave of the coarsest and most brutal—just as a chuir or table, which once decorated the superb saloon, comes at last, battered and defaced, to the bar-room of some fithly tavern, or some low haunt of vulgar debiuschery. The great difference is, that the table and chair cantot feel, and the most can; for even a legal enactment that he shall be "taken, reputed, adjudged in law, to be a chattel personal," cannot blot out his soul, with its own private little world of memories, hopes, loves, feurs, and desires.

Mr. Simon Legree, Tom's master, had purchased whaves at one place and another, in New Orloans, to the number of eight, and driven them, handeuffed, in couples of two and two, down to the good attenuer Pirate, which lay at the levee, ready for a trip up the Red River.

Having got them fairly on board, and the boat heing off, he came round, with that air of efficiency which were characterised him, to take a review of them. Stopping opposite to Tom, who had been attired for sale in his best broadeleth suit, with well-starthed linen and s me, neither with squalling nor soft soap—that's a fact!"
"You have a fine lot there."
"Real." said Simon. "There's that Tom, they tell'd me he was suthin' uncommon. I paid a little high for him, tending him for a driver and a managing chap; only got the notions out that he's larn't by bein' treated as niggers never ought to be, he'll do prime! The yellow woman I got took in in. I rather think she's sickly, but I shall put her through for what she's worth. She may last a year or two. I don't go for savin' niggers. Use up and buy more's my way; makes you less trouble, and I'm quite sure it comes cheaper in the end;" and Simon sipped his glass.
"And how long do they generally last!" said the stranger.
"Wall donne: 'covdin' as their constitution.

among the boxes—

"You go there, and put these on."

Tem obeyed, and in a few mements returned.

"Take off your boots," said Mr. Legree.

Tom did so.

"There," said the former, throwing him a pair and Simon sipped his glass.

"And how long do they generally last!" said the stranger.

"Well, donno; cordin' as their constitution is. Stoat fellers last six or seven years; trashy ones gets worked up in two or three. I used to, when I tust begun, have considerable trouble fussin' with 'em and trying to make 'em hold out—doctrin' on 'em up when ther's sick, and givin on 'em cloths and blankets, and what not, tryin' to keep 'em all sort o'decent and comfortable. Law, 'twasn't no sort o' use; I lost money on 'em, and 'twas heaps o' trouble. Now, you see, I just put 'em straight through, sick or well. When one nigger's dead I buy another; and I find it comes cheaper and easier, every way."

The stranger turned away, and seated himself beside a gentleman who had been listening to the conversation with repressed uneasiness.

"You must not take that fellow to be any specimen of Southern planters," said he.

"I should hope not," said the young gentleman, with emphasis.

"He is a mean; low, brutal fellow," said the other.

"And yet your laws allow him to hold any one night, Lors, he talked so orful to me, and he tell me he'd sell me to just the hardest master he could find; and he'd promised me my freedom, too, when he died."

"Had you any friends!" said Emmeline.

"Yes, my husband; he's a blacksmith. Mas'r generally hired him out. They took me off so quick, I didn't even have time to see him; and I'se got four children. Oh, dear me!" said the woman, covering her face with her hands. It is a natural impulse in every one, when they hear a tale of distress, to think of something to say by way of consolation. Emmeline wanted to say something, but she could not think of anything to say. What was there to be said! As by a common consent, they both avoided, with fear and dread, all mention of the horrible man who was now their master.

True, there is religious trust for even the darkest hour. The mulatto woman was a member of the Methodist church, and had an unenlightened but very sincere spirit of piety. Emmeline had been educated much more intelligently—taught to read and write, and dilligently—taught to read and write, and di years!

The boat moved on—freighted with its weight of sorrow—up the red, muddy, turbid current, through the abrupt, tortuous windings of the Red River; and sad eyes gazed wearily on the steep red-clay banks, as they glided by in dreary sameness. At last the boat stopped at a small town, and Legree with his party disambarked.

THE SEARCH FOR SIR JOHN FRANKLIN. THE SEARCH FOR SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

(From the Loadon Atheneum, April 9th)

The departure of the Isabel screw steamer for Bering's Straits, furnishes another proof of Lady Franklin's devotion to her husband and his companions, and of her zeal in carrying out measures for their rescue. It is due to the Admrality to state, that they have rendered some assistance in the equipment of the Isabel, and that this vessel will be towed by a Government steamer as far as the Isle of Wight. The heavy expences, however, of provisioning and stoing the vessel, with a part of the crew—fifteen in number—is defrayed by Lady Franklin. The Isabel is provisioned with every requisite for her long voyage. Mr. Kennedy hopes to reach Vancouver's Island with his stock of fuel. There he will take in a fresh supply—that Island having, valuable coal mines on the north-eastern-side, about fifty miles from the chief settlement of Fort Victoria. He will take in a stock of dried beef and vegetables. His provisions include an abundance of various anti-scorbutic and preserved meat and vegetables. Mr. Kennedy will sail on temperance principles, taking with him only such a quantity of sinists as (From the London Atheneum, April 9th ) served meat and vegetables. Mr. Kennedy will sail on temperance principles, taking with him only such a quantity of spirits as may be necessary for medical purposes. His first object will be to communicate with Commander Maguire, at Point Barrow, which is 600 miles beyond the entrance to Behring's straits. If he succeed in affecting this, he will, should the sea be sufficiently open, make his steampower available in any manner that may be deemed most desirable for prosecuting the search for Sir John Franklin, and for the Captains Collinson and M'Clure. To this paragraph we may add, that the enterprising Arctic traveler, Dr. Rae, leaves Liverpool this day (Saturday) for New York, from whence he will journey as fast as possible to Lake Superior, and thence by canoes, to the North American shores: He hopes to be able, by a dint can shores. He hopes to be able, by a dint of long marches, to effect his proposed ex-ploration this summer; and if he discovers, as we think he will, a continuity of water between Bellot Strait and the passage be-tween America and Wollaston and Victoria tween America and Wolfaston and Victoria Land, he will have discovered a northwest passage! not, in all probabity, a passage practicable for ships, but water communica-tion between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans to the north of the American continent. THE SOCIETY OF LADIES.

THE SOCIETY OF LADIES.

The following persinent remarks occur at the close of an article on the dangers of "College Life," from the pen-of a New York clergyman, which appeared in the New York Times:

The society of ladies has done much for me all my life long; and it was the salutary, softening, inducence of such associations that, with God's bleming, restrained me from many in excess into which I might otherwise lave been led while receiving my education. It is a bad sigh when a young man has no relieb for such company. Whatever be a man's estation in life, whether higher or lower, public or private, he will become a better man, and escape many a disaster, if he will listen in the season to the voice of the intelligent and the refused among the other sex. Not only do they generally excel us in their nice perception of the proprieties of life, and in their render cense of day to both God and man, but they are equally before us in their instinctive feelity of forecing the character and motives of mes. It was not all a dream which made the wife of Julius Construction that he should not go to the Security Chamber on the fatal Idea of March; and, had he complied with here astruction, he might have ascaped the dagger of Brytan. Disaster followed disaster in the currer of Naphron, from the time has be counted to feel the balance wheel, of Josephine's influence on his important questions were substitude to this, often he will be additionable before

In-deed, the great majority of men who have sequired for themselves a good and great hame, were not only married men, but happily married.—" both paired and matched."

How to Daess.—A friend of ours says the Portland Transcript, who had long been absent, returned recently, and called upon two beautiful young ladies of his aquaintance. One came quickly to greet him in the neat, yet not precise attire, in which she was performing her household duties. The other, after the lapse of half an hour, made her stately entrance, in all the primness of starch and ribonds, with which, on the announcement of his entrance she had hastened to bedeck herself. Our friend, who had long been hesitating on his choice between the two, now hesitated no longer. The cordinlity with which the first hastened to greet him, and the charming carelesaness of her attire, entirely won his heart. She is now his wife.

of her attire, entirely won his heart. She is now his wife.
Young ladies, take warning from the above, and never refuse to see a friend because you have on a wash gown. Be assured that the true gentleman will not think less of you because he finds you in the performance of your duties, and not ashamed to let it be known. Besides, there may positively be a grace, a witching wildness about an every day dress, that adds to every charm of face and feature. Old Herric expresses this "delight in disorder" far betpresses this "delight in disorder" far ter than we can:

han. we can:

"A sweet disorder in the dress,
(A happy kind of carelessness):
A lawn upon the shealders thrown,
Into a fine distraction:
An erring lace, which here and there
Enthrals the crimson stomacher:
A cull neglectful; and thereby,
Ribands that flow confusedly;
A winning wave, disserving note,
In the tempestuous petiticat;
A careless shoestring in whose tie
I see a wild civility;
Do more bewitch me than where art
Is too precise in every part."

ARTIFICIAL STONE FRONTS.—A great number of houses are built with coarse brick fronts, which afterwards receive two or three coats of builded oil, and are then covered with a cost of peculiar mastic cement, which is composed; we are told, mostly of dried sand, some boiled oil, some red lead, and a little plaster of Paris. This coment resembles moist sand when put on, but it sticks well and in a short time, becomes at hard as freestone, which it greatly resembles. This plaster is streaked off in blocks, and a building so covered, looks like one built of hard brown polished freestone. We have heard objections made to such buildings, but not one by a person who had taste and experience in architecture. This coment does not scale off; it endures and forms a thorough coating of artificial stone.

A BUSY PAY DAY

A BUSY PAY DAY.

A profligate young fellow, a son of a lawyer of some eminence in Rhode Island, on a certain muster inspection day, purchased a horse of an ignorant farmer, and engaged to pay for it on the next inspection day. He gave a note; but instead of inspection, he inserted the word resurrection, word resurr spection, he inserted the word resurrection, making it payable on the resurrection day? When the inspection day had come, and the farmer, unsuspicious of the trick, supposed the note to be due, he called on the young man for payment. The latter expressed great astonishment that he should call on him before the note was out.

"But it is out," said the farmer; "you call on him before the note was out.

"But it is out," said the farmer; "you promised to pay me the next inspection day; the time has come, and I want my money."

"If you look at the note again," said the young man, coolly, "you will find it has a very long while to run yet!"

The farmer was sure the note was due, or ought to be; but on spelling it over carefully, he found, to his astonishment, that it was not due till the resurrection day. He remonstrated with the young scape grace; but all to no purpose, and he finally laid the case before his father, the lawyer. The latter took his son aside, and told him he had better settle the thing at once.

"For" said he, "though the pay day is far distant, you are in a thir way to have business enough on your hands that day, without having your notes to settle." The advice was taken.

Sum Enough—Mother, asked a fittle girl, while listening to the reading of Uncle Tom's Cabins. Why don't the book never mention Topsey's last name ? I have tried to hear it whenever it spoke, but it has nover once spoke."

Why, she had no other name, child. "Yes she had mother, and I know it."
