IVANHOE.

(BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.)

CHAPTER XXIX.

'The Black Knight,' answered Rebecca, faintly; then instantly again shouted with joyful eagerness: 'But no—but no—the name of the Lord of hosts be blessed!—he is on foot again, and fights as if there were twenty men's strength in his single arm. His sword is broken—he snatches an axe from a yeoman—he presses Front-de-Bœuf with blow on blow. The giant stoops and totters like an oak under the steel of the woodman—he falls—he falls!'

'Front-de-Bœuf?' exclaimed Ivanhoe. 'Front-de-Bœuf!' answered the Jewess; 'his men rush to the rescue, headed by the haughty Templar—their united strength compels the champion to pause. They drag Front-de-Bœuf within the wall.'

'The assailants have won the barriers, have they not?' said Ivanhoe. 'They have—they have!' exclaimed Rebecca—and they press the besieged hard upon the outer wall; some plant ladders, some swarm like bees, and endeavor to ascend upon the shoulders of each other—down go stones, beams and trunks of trees upon their heads, and as fast as they bear the wounded to the rear, fresh men supply their places in the assault—Great God! hadst thou given men thine own image, that it should be thus cruelly defaced by the hands of their brethren!

'Think not of that,' exclaimed Ivanhoe; 'this is no time for such thoughts—Who yield?—who push the way?'

'The ladders are thrown down,' replied Rebecca, shuddering; 'the soldiers lie grovelling under them like crushed reptiles—the besieged have the better.'

'Saint George strike for us,' exclaimed Ivanhoe; 'do the false yeomen give way?'

'No,' exclaimed Rebecca, 'they bear themselves right yeomanly—the Black Knight approaches the postern with his huge axe—the thundering blows which he deals, you may hear above the din and shouts of battle—stones and beams are hailed down on the bold champion—he regards them no more than if they were thistle-down or feathers!'

'By Saint John of Acre,' said Ivanhoe, raising himself joyfully on his couch, 'methought there was but one man in England who might do such a deed!'

'The postern gate shakes,' continued Rebecca; 'it crashes; it is splintered by his blows; they rush in, the outlook is won. Oh, God! they hurl the defenders from the battlements, they throw them into the moat. Oh, men, if ye be indeed men spare them that can no longer resist!'

'The bridge, the bridge which communicates with the castle; have they won that pass?'

'No,' replied Rebecca, 'the Templar has destroyed the plank over which they crossed; few of the defenders escaped with him into the castle; the shrieks and cries which you hear tell the fate of the others. I see it is still more difficult to look upon victory than upon defeat.'

'What do they now, maiden?' said Ivanhoe; 'look forth again, maiden—this is no time to faint at bloodshed.'

'It is over for the time,' replied Rebecca; 'our friends strengthen themselves within the outlook they have won, and it affords them no good a shelter from the foemen's shot, that the garrison only bestow a few shots on it from time to time as if rather to disquiet than effectually injure them.'

'Our friends,' said Wilfred, 'will surely not abandon an enterprise so gloriously begun and so happily attained. O no, I will put my faith in the good knight whose axe hath rent heart of oak and bars of iron. Singularly, he again muttered to himself, 'if there be two who can do such a deed of daring. Seest thou naught else, Rebecca, by which the Black Knight may be distinguished?'

'Nothing,' said the Jewess, 'all about him is as black as the wing of the night raven. Nothing can I spy that can mark him further—but having once seen him put forth his strength in battle, methinks I could know him among a thousand warriors. He rushes to the fray as if he were summoned to a banquet. There is more than mere strength, there seems as if the whole soul and spirit of the champion were given to every blow which he deals his enemies. God forgive him the sin of bloodshed! it is fearful yet magnificent to behold how the arm and heart of one man can triumph over hundreds!'

'Rebecca,' said Ivanhoe, 'thou has painted a hero. Under such a hero as thou hast painted this knight to be, there are no cold blooded fears, no yielding up a gallant prize; the difficulties which render it dangerous render it also glorious. I would endure years of captivity to fight one day by the side of that good knight.'

Spheroidal Spectacles

AND

EYE GLASSES

ARE the best for the preservation of the sight, and took the medal at the Centennial Exhibition.

The lenses are made of the best material, uniform in density, and of high refractive power, their perfect polish and spheroidal shape adapt them to each and improve the sight of the wearer. The eye being the most delicate organ great care should be exercised in selecting spectacles; it is not enough that the glass be of the right focus, but the lenses must be perfectly centered and in many cases perfect relief is only given by having each eye fitted separately. To effect this the lenses are made interchangeable, and having an Optometer to measure the sight, a perfect fit is guaranteed.
