Godericu, January 26th, 1864. Paris for the preservation of wheat from Paris for the preservation of wheat from fermentation and the attack of insects by enit in a metal vessel and exhausting the air.

The experiment was made in the presence of 40 persons, and succeeded perfectly. Ten hectolitres of wheat were placed in a metal vessel, and the air was exhausted. The vessel was opened after the lays, and the was villa, which we seen quite lively when the wheat was placed in the vessel, had quitted their cells and were dead. They were warmed and did not stir. Being placed on white paper, they were crushed and reduced to powder, without leaving any stain upon the paper, from various experiments made on wheat under glass, it was found that the weevil retains life longer than any other insect when deprived of air.
