Nfld. Scotch Cured Herring

Brisk autumn weather has naturally had its effect on the market for Newfoundland Scotch cured herring, and it is new in good demand again in New York. The volume of business, however, has been small, and merchants are inclined to eschew large orders, which are understood to be available in the interest in their regular trade. As there is a relatively small quantity of Newfoundland Scotch cured herring now held by New York merchants and as stocks in the future will not be large, it may be expected that the trade in this grade will be limited to local busings.
