Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

GIVING SERVICES OR SELLING THEM.

RUTH CAMERON

How many people do not realize the difference in the quality of work demanded from the paid and the unpaid worker?

A man who has a very capable wife was talking to me one day about what she would do if anything happened to him.

"I'm sure Ethel would be perfectly capable of supporting the children," he said. "You have a very smart woman."

Naturally I agreed and then ventured to ask just what line of work he would expect her to take up.

He thought she would step into a Good Executive Position.

"Well, I think some good executive position would be the sort of thing she'd shine in," he said. "You know she's been treasurer of the D-Club for four years and she was president of the F-s (naming two large women's clubs) for two terms, and you know what she's done in war work, and she's always running some big affair and making a howling success of it. She ought to step right into some good executive position."

Now his wife is a very smart woman, and doubtless the work she has done would be preparation for executive work, but as to her stepping right into a good executive position, well that is another story. For it is one thing to give one's service to a social organization and quite another thing to sell them to a business organization.

When First Class Becomes Fourth Class.

The quality of service which in one class would be considered first class in the other might be called fourth class.

I went recently into a war headquarters maintained by one of the best women's clubs in the country. The woman in charge was chatting with two visitors. My mother and I waited several moments, standing up. I then procured my mother a chair from behind a table and we waited two or three minutes more but finally left without having received any attention from the woman in charge. To be sure, she was busy with someone else but if she had been hired by a business organization, would that have excused her for managing to find us chairs and make us feel at home while she disposed of the other visitors? hardly.

How Long Would These Women Last On A Real Job?

Again, there is a certain organization in one of our large cities which aims to find positions, other than teaching, for college women. I know of several women who have gone to this organization in vain. In one case a woman wanted to teach millinery. They knew of no opening and discouraged her. She has since found an excellent chance. Again another woman asked her what the call for women in banks was. They gave a discouraging report. She wrote to three bank presidents and received an offer of a position from one and encouragement from another. This organization is the philanthropy of wealthy women so it does not have to show results. If it were a business how long would last, or, rather, how long would the present employees last?

I'll leave the answer to that to any real business woman.

When kneading fondant, if it sticks to the hands dip them in alcohol.

Syrup is very acceptable for sweetening many kinds of cooked vegetables.

AFTER STORMS.

What a wonderful world it is when the rain has passed away.

And the blue comes back to the sky once more and the sunshine fills the day.

How fresh and bright are the friendly trees that yesterday dripped their tears.

When the gloom departs and the sun comes out, how splendid the world appears!

But oh, how sweet, is the thrill of joy that comes to the troubled heart when the sun of hope shines high once more and the clouds of fear depart.

When the Lord has answered his anguished prayers and his loved one smiles again.

How sweet the thrill of the peace that comes to banish the hurt and pain.

Household Notes.

Never use a soiled powder puff. Brush pastry with syrup to glaze it.

Polishing lengthens the life of shoes. Pour delicate custard over stewed fruit.

Cinnamon toast goes well with ice cream. Greens should always be boiled in salted water.

A can of stewed tomatoes is nice in lamb stew. Serve asparagus soup with strips of toasted bread.

Always salt the water in which eggs are poached. Begin fly-trapping as early in the season as possible.

Never remove angel cake from its mould till it is cold. Dandelions have a very stimulating effect upon the liver.

Oatmeal scones may be served with syrup and cream. Emergency buying of groceries is always expensive buying.

When egg sauce curdles, place it in ice-water and beat well. Leaves of wild mustard may be used in place of watercress.

An electric iron should be part of every household equipment. Getting breakfast is easier if the work is started the night before.

Braided rolls are a pleasant change from the ordinary shapes. A little cornstarch put into a fruit pie prevents it running over.

Asparagus cooked with tender tips of pork has a delicious flavor. Wild sorrel, mixed with lettuce or chopped cabbage, makes a good salad.

An electric washer soon pays for itself if the housewife manipulates it. Dust cornstarch on your cakes before icing. The icing will not run off.

When beating rugs they will be cleaner if laid over a discarded bed-spring. When boiling syrup for candy it should cool sufficiently before it is beaten.

Tin trays may be painted black and prettily decorated in conventional designs.

The world seems going to the dogs, and governments are slipping cogs, and everything is wrong; all sorts of crazy notions thrive, and Windy Jims are much alive, and anarchy seems strong. The workless workers brag and boast, and send us bombs by parcel post, and rough on rats by mail; and while the lawless hoboes yip some nervous gents may lose their grip and sweat some blood and wall. The world's unsettled for a time; the German carnival of crime broke all our moorings loose; it's vain to walk the floor at night and say that everything in sight is going to the deuce. Did you suppose when war was done that everything would smoothly run, without a kick or balk? Did you suppose we'd all get back to walking in the same old track without a squeak or squawk? The world was shaken to its base, and everything knocked out of place, and naught uninjured stood; did you suppose the dawn of peace would make all signs of tumult cease? Your guessing was no good. I am surprised things run so well right after four long years of hell, when all our hords were lost; we can't endure such years of strife and then resume the old time life—we have to pay the cost. The gents who send their bombs by mail in time will find such pastime stale, and they'll start pitching hay; and all the talk of blood we hear, of bringing in a reign of fear, will shortly die away.
