otototocotototot CHAPTER VII. It must have become pretty evident by his time that Mark Warden was sailing under false colors—that he had set out on the voyage of life in rather buccaneer fashion. He could not but own it, even fashion. He could not but own it, even to himself, distinctly and consciously. And yet—what was he to do? Everything had some how or other seemed so plain and easy to him while he was at Cambridge. There, he had not been able, living as an unmarried man with other unmarried men, absorbed in the work of the place, with only himself to think of, to feel that he was not as others were. Marie had become a sort of dream to him; and so he had felt, whenever he thought about the matter at all, that he must have become a sort of dream to Marie. Had he been an idle man, with nothing to do but write love letters, things might have worn a different aspect to him. But when a strong man's heart is in his work, and when the pect to him. But when a strong man's heart is in his work, and when that work is purely selfish, he is seldom able to realize what concerns others. But now, once more in Denethorp, relieved from the iron of hard work, and in the midst of all the associations of three years ago, the image of Marie took a far more substantial form, and became anything but a dream. Once more, what was he to do?

was he to do?

He might resign his fellowship, declare his marriage, and take a curacy and pupils. "Of course," the reader will say; "what else?" But then he would have thrown away the hopes, the labor, the success of years; he would condemn himsulf to an obscure and uncongenial life success of years; he would condemn himself to an obscure and uncongenial life for the rest of his days; it would be far worse than committing suicide. No-anything but that, he thought. And let not the reader be too sure, if he is not guided by some nobler principle than Mark Warden, that he, under similar circumstances, would not think in a similar way. And so, before he slept, he entered into a sort of compromise with himself. The marriage had been secret for three years—let it be secret for four; and then—who knows what might hapand then—who knows what might hap-pen? It is not only weak-minded men who, when pushed into a moral diffi-culty, cast their burden upon the should-ers of Fortune.

Nevertheless it was in a frame of mind made up of doubt and of that sort of self-justification which is the surest on rising, faced the fresh, honest breath of the morning, laden with the old-fashioned flowers of long ago. From the window of his room he saw his sisthe window of his room he saw his sister, with uncovered head, sleeves tucked up, and shoes down at heel, mysteriously engaged with a clothesline which extended from one brick wall of the garden to the other; and the sight did not please him, for it suggested to him the vision of a future Mrs. Brown. Then he descended into the parlor, still strongly flavored with the effects of last evening. It was by no means early, but there were no signs of breakfast; indeed in that house nothing seemed to be done at any particular time or in any particular manner. Presently, however, his father came in; and then, somehow or other, breakfast and Lorry made their appearance together.

"Well, Mark," said the Doctor, "what are you up to today? I wanted to have seen something of you; but there's always something or another. I really must go and see that child of Wilkins. must go and see that child of Wilkins. I ought to have gone yesterday—only something put it out of my head; and—hang it! my boots weren't cleaned this morning. But never mind—they'll do for once in a way. But that reminds me—I promised to go and see what's-his-name on Sunday. Well, well, I daresay it was nothing nerticular." nothing particular.

Oh, never mind me. I shall just stroll out somewhere." about somewhere."
Laura looked knowingly at her brother; for though not a confidante of his great secret, she had not been blind to his great flirtation. "I think I can fancy where you'll stroll to," she said.
"And, Lorry," continued the Doctor, if Summers calls about that bill again, you know, tell him I haven't forgotten

Eczema itch

The Most Exasperating of All Skin Diseases-The Most Difficult to Cure-Dr. Chase's Ointment Proven To Be an Effective

Eczema's itch is torture, the skin seems on fire with the burning, stinging humor; and at times it becomes almost unbearable, and in desperation could tear the skin to pieces. You dare not exercise for fear of aggravating the itching; neither can you sleep, for no sooner does the body become warm than the trouble begins, and instead of restful, refreshing sleep. it is scratch, scratch, scratch all night iong. There is scarcely a moment's respite from this maddening malady at any time. Of course you have tried nearly all the washes, salves, lotions and medicated soaps, but like thousands of others have been disappointed and disgusted. Ann McDonald, Kingsville, Ont., states: "For about three years I was a dreadful sufferer from eczema. At times the patches of raw, flaming sesh would extend from my waist to neck, and from the knees to enkles. The intense itching almost drove me crazy, and though I tried all the local physicians, they could not even relieve the suffering. The flesh would crack open, and I don't believe envone suffered more than I did.

"I was told of Dr. Chase's Ointment, but did not believe that it would help me. After the fifth application of this preparation I began to feel the benefit of its soothing, healing effects, and now attribute a cure to the persistent use of this wonderful remedy. It is truly worth its weight in gold, and I never tire of recommending it to other sufferers." You may be skeptical regarding the ability of Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure you. Most people are, after trying in vain to get relief from a host of remedies, but Dr. Chase's Ointment will not disappoint you. You will be surprised over the marvelous control it has over all itching, burning inflammation of the skin, and the wonderful healing powers which it possesses It takes time to thoroughly cure eczema, but Dr. Chase's Ointment will do it. You will find relief after a few cations, and gradually and naturally the cure will follow. Besides being a positive cure for eczema, Dr. Chase's Ointment comes useful in a hundred ways in every home for every form of skin irritation and eruption, chapped skin and chilblains. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co.,

away heavily, munching his last mouthful of breakfast as he left the door.
Then Lorry in a few minutes was car-

Then Lorry in a few minutes was car-Then Lorry in a rew minutes was carried off by the red-armed maid, and Mark was left to follow his own devices. His sister proved a true prophetess. As, indeed, he was only bound in duty to do, he took himself slowly and uncomiortably to Market street. The distance was not far, but he was a long time in traversing it. For now that his tance was not far, but he was a long time in traversing it; for now that his meeting with Marie was imminent and inevitable, his anxiety about it, and about the nature of the relation that must somehow or other be established between him and her, for the present almost tempted him to fly from the situation altogether. He almost began to doubt whether he, the precociously wise, had not been guilty of a great piece of folly for once in his life.

Chance also aided his feeble attempts to procrastinate—attempts of which, to do nim justice, he was half ashamed. It was by no means a pleasant thing for do him justice, he was half ashamed. It was by no means a pleasant thing for him to feel that he, Mark Warden, wrangler, fellow, et cetera, was afraid to meet Marie, who was Marie, and nothing more. He would have sufficiently despised any other man who feared to meet a woman, and that woman his own wife. But for himself he welcomed the chance that aided him, nevertheless. At a smart trot along the High street came a light trap, driven by his traveling companion or yesterday. Hugh Lester also saw Warden, and pulled up.

"You're the very man I want to see, Warden," he said, "What do you think? I'm going to stand for Denethorp."

"Indeed? But I heard something about it last night. I wish you a triumphant return, with all my heart."

"Thanks, old fellow. But you must do something more than that. You've become a great man here, you know."

"I am sure I did not know it."

"I don't know what people don't think you've heen doing. There seems.

"I am sure I did not know it."

"I don't know what people don't think you've been doing. There seems a sort of impression that you've been made Archbishop of Canterbury. I've been having a little talk with White, you know. I wish you'd come and see him, if you wouldn't mind."

"But what could I do?"

"Oh lots of things. You see this is

"Oh, lots of things. You see, this is how things are, or something like it. You have heard, I suppose, that they want to turn us out?"

turn us out?"

"But they won't, of course."

"Not if we can help it. But from what White says, they seem to have got all the brains on their side, and most of the money. Are you a good hand at talking—at spouting, I mean?"

"I never made a speech in my life."

"Never mind that. The fact is, White has been asking me about you, and I told him you could do everything. So just come and see him, there's a good fellow. I shall be tremendously obliged."

"I should be delighted to be of any use, of course—if I thought I could be of any."

any."
"Of course you can. You'll come and see White, then?" see Wh.
"Now?"

"Now?"

"If you could. Can you?"

Warden smiled to himself. This was indeed a triumph in its way. So he was to be pitted against the new-comer—to provide brains for his party! It was faute de mieux, of course; but a man, when he feels really flattered, does not think of that. He had had a welcome back worth having, after all. "It is always so," he thought to himself; "a man is always best appreciated outside his own home." But then Marie-he ought not to be an hour longer in the place without at least trying to see her.
"I have a call to make," he said, "but that will keep, if you and White really want me."

"Jump up, then—I'll drive you, and we can talk as we go along. By the way, I have to go a little out of my way first—you won't mind? I have to clek up a young lady who is staying with us, and who came in to make a sist, and whom I'm to drive back to harl's Dene. You know something of her perhaps?—Miss Raymond, of New Court, work how?"

you know."
"Indeed? My father used to know Mrs. "No doubt. She's a capital girl, I mean her to canvass for me furiously; and as you're to do the same I must introduce you. I wish I had an elder brother. Warden—catching votes won't be such good fun as catching trout, I fancy. However, I'm in for it now—so Lester for ever!" he said, with a laugh, and a touch to the horses that made them start off sharply. "I shall be as excited about it as my good aunt herself before it's all over. Gently, Bay—that child may be a voter's—so there's my first piece of bribery." he said, as he threw a coin to a small child that had apparently taken care to wait before crossing the street until its passage doubt. She's a capital girl. I had apparently taken care to wait before crossing the street until its passage lay directly under the horses' heels. "And now, here we are."

They had turned into Market street, and, to Mark's surprise, had stopped at the very bootmaker's shop to which he himself had been bound when he was overtaken by Lester, Surely it was not likely that Miss Raymond would buy her shoes in Denethorp, much less in Market street. He devoutly hoped that none of the Lefort family might be looking out of the window, for he naturally wished to make his visit in his own way. Lester sent his groom with a message for Miss Raymond that he was at the for Miss Raymond that he was at the door; and presently down came Ernest to say that she would be ready immedi-

And so the messenger, without having delivered his message, and without any awe of Hugh, made a charge at the side of the trap at which he old acquaintance was sitting.

"Why Ernest!" said the latter, with forced geniality, "where do you drop from? and how are they all?"

"Oh, all right. Oh, I was to say the lady will be down directly."

"And who are you, my man?" asked Lester.

"And who are you, my man?" asked Lester.

"Oh, I'm Ernest."

"And who's Ernest?"

"Don't you know? Ernest Lefort."

"You know the Leforts, Warden?"

"Yes—that is—oh, yes, I know them.
Wait a minute, Ernest, I'll just run up for a second, Lester, if you don't mind."

"All right. By the way, would they mind my going up too? It would be rather a joke—I'll tell you why afterwards. I know one of them myself."

Now it would be doing Mark Warden supreme injustice to suppose for a moment that he was in the least really ashamed of his humble friends in the presence of his grand acquaintance. His real desire to make his visit alone was of course founded on other reasons.
But still to guide the heir of Earl's Dene to the bootmaker's second floor was rather a downfall, after having been paraded in the streets of Denethorp as his familiar companion, and he felt it a little.

Monsieur Lefort had gone out to give

little.
Monsieur Lefort had gone out to give his lessons, so that when the two entered, preceded by Ernest, they found only the three girls and Fleurette, who was amusing herself upon Miss Raymond's knee.

Winnipeg, Jan. 24.—One of the finest games of hockey seen here in years was played last night, and settled the fate of the Stanley cup for another year. The Victorias again proved that they had every right to hold the title of champions by defeating the Wellingtons, of Toronto, by a score of 5 to 3. The Wellingtons put up a lovely game, but were on the defensive nearly the whole time. Their second goal was scored by a man who was lingering off-side within five yards of Victorias' goal. A Victoria touched it, however, and put him on side, and he slammed it in. Morrison again shone out as a particular star, saving his team from what would have been a very bad beating. His game is marvelous. McKay and another Wellington collided with each other when they tried to stop Flett, but the only disastrous results were to themselves. McKay got a body check shortly after, which made him weak. About the middle of the second half he was injured in some manner, and a spare man put on. While the people sympathized with the visitors, they were mightily pleased to see the cup was in such capable hands as those of the Victorias. The score about indicates the play. The Victorias banqueted the visitsuch capable hands as those of the victorias. The score about indicates the play. The Victorias banqueted the visitors at the Queen's last night. PROGRESSIVE PROGRAMME.

$76,631, and it had been well worth the money-(cheers); on consolidation of statutes, $230,665, and for Scott act enforcement, $45,445, a total of $11,906,901 This was a position upon which they could not only congratulate themselves, but might expect congratula-tions from honorable gentlemen oppo-site. Of a revenue of about $113,000,000 which had gone through their hands, nearly $6,000,000 had gone back directly to the municipalities and over $1,-500,000 in loans to municipalities for drainage, and yet they started the year with a million and a half of cash in hand.

Quebec had a debt of over $22,000,000, Nova Scotia of $2,713,302, New Brunswick $2,751,000, and British Columbia over $5,000,000. Last year's receipts in Ontario had exceeded the estimates by $640,511. NEW EXPENDITURES.

Continuing, he said that they had kept well within the bounds of the estimates. Then there were some extraordinary expenditures which had to be met: $19,655 for the London Infirmary, $52,341 for Cobourg Asylum, $26,838 for the Agricultural College, $10,328 for London Normal School and $20,000 on account of the royal reception. There were some increases in this year's estimates in some departments and de-creases in others. In this connection he said, the government would need $7,000 or $8,000 additional for the Agricultural College to purchase a site for the buildings to be erected by the handsome gift of $125,000 from Sir William Macdonald. A vote of $100,000 for the new science building at Toronto University would be an expenditure of $85,000 or $86,000 for the general elec-

MINING DEVELOPMENT. Continuing, Mr. Ross cited the establishment of the bureau of mines as an important step. They had been advised to appoint a minister of mines, and they could perhaps do no more popular thing in certain quarters. He was not prepared to say there would not be abundant work for a minister of mines, for the wealth of our northern districts was fabulous. In 1895 there was not a pound of iron ore raise or smelted in Ontario. In 1896 the first blast furnace was established; in 1900 90,302 tons and in 1901 300,000 tons of iron ore were smelted in the three blast furnaces of this provinces. We might yet rival Northern Michigan, Spain, Belgium, or Germany in our mining development.

The Bureau of Mines had done much to attract outside capital and prospec-tors to the mineral wealth of the provinces. There was a prospect for great copper development, particularly near Sault Ste. Marie, and since last session a railway had been built most of the way from Bruce Mines to Rock Lake, 12 miles. The nickel industry now gave employment to 1,500 men, and new works at Victoria Mines had cost $800,000, and employed 400 men. PRE-EMINENT IN AGRICULTURE.

Continuing, the premier referred to the expenditure for agricultural purposes, and said that in this industry the province had made advances which had given it profound pre-eminence in comparison with other countries. He made particular mention in this instance of the Farmers' Institutes, and the opposition criticism which greeted the first proposal to establish them. Now it was freely admitted that 1:40.

greeted the first proposal to establish them. Now it was freely admitted that they had been of great benefit, and were continuing to do splendid work. The premier then referred to some projected measures. "We proposed, last year," he said, "to build a rallway from North Bay to Temiskaming, and here I might remind the doubting Thomases that this government keep their pledges. (Government applause.) It was said last year that it would not be built, that we were flying a kite. Well, it is going to be built, all being well. (Renewed government applause.) We promised the house that we would make arrangements with railways subsidized for special rates for settlers and settlers' effects. We have completed arrangements with the Canadian North-ern Railway for the transportation of settlers from Port Arthur to any part of that district for one cent a mile, and for half-freight rates for their ef-(Government applause.) fects. think it is only a proper thing that a railway subsidized for opening up a country should give special facilities for the settlement of the country it opens up. (Renewed government ap-

They had also, he said, passed legislation with regard to the development of the beet-sugar industry, and had the strongest assurances of success in that regard. A factory at Berlin was practically assured; the buildings of directors of the London Missionary the one at Wallaceburg were almost Society. They anticipate by the end of March an accumulated deficit of and another at Galt, and there were others proposed elsewhere.

It was also the policy of the government to see that the raw materials of the country were manufactured as far as possible in the country. "The time for exporting sawlegs has gone," he said; "the time for exporting square timber ought to be gone, and the sooner it is the better." (Government applause.) He would like to see Ontario's timber going out in as advanced a stage of manufacture as possible. He would like to see Ontario's wheat going to England not as grain, but as flour. Manufacture meant the employ-ment of capital and labor, and that meant more settlers of the best kind for the province.

CONFIDENT LIBERALISM. "I have endeavored," Mr. Ross said in conclusion, "to give a retrospect of our financial position, and where we have found ourselves. I have endeavored to show that at every stage of the progress of the grand march of Liberalism in this country there was no dropping of the head, no want of confidence, no failure to grapple with whatever problem arose. The government which I have the honor to lead have endeavored to follow in the footsteps of their predecessors. Our motto is to 'build up Ontario,' not simply industries, the manufactures, not simply in settling the waste places but to build it up educationally, agriculturally and in every other respect. Our motto is to keep Ontario in the first rank of the various provinces of the Dominion, and to so apply the public moneys intrusted to us that there may be prosperity, as far as we can promote it, from the home of the humblest artisan to the manor house of the wealthiest citizen of this land. (Applause.) That where labor toils for its bare existence it may get its natural reward, and where the larger combinations of capital take large risks, reasonable security may be given for their success. There can be no ultimate success unless there is a general diffusion of wealth, unless there is the heartiest co-operation on the part of the legislature with those who are endeavoring to promote what-ever industries come to their hands." and prolonged ministerial cheers.)

financial critic of the opposition, replied, and set himself to prove that the province was in debt $5,000,000 above its available assets. He was followed by Mr. Graham in a brief but exceedingly vigorous address.
