BRITISH AVIATORS PERISH IN THAMES

River and Drown After Explosion.

London, Jan. 13. - Two British airmen, L. F. MacDonald and a man named Inglis, were drowned in the River Thames this afternoon. The aviators were flying at a height well above the river, when the machine suddenly swooped downward Immediately upon coming in contact with the water the engine exploded. One of the aviators clung for a while to the top of the machine, but he sank before the boats, which were hurriedly put off from shore, could reach him. The accident occurred at Long Reach, between Purfleet and Greenhithe, on the Lower Thames, where many of the ships of the British navy undergo their trials over the measured
